WEDDED TO HER ART.

A Talk with Mrs. Brooks, the Butter Sculptress.

HER HOPES FOR THE FUTURE.

What She Has to Exhibit in the Fine Arts Building at the Great World's Columbian Exposition—She States Her Views on Artists in General and Their Awful Responsibility.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 11.—[Special.]—Mrs. Caroline Shawk Brooks, "Butter Sculptress of the Centennial," as the world knows her, complains that she can get no concession from the managers, not even to sell photographs, and therefore cannot finish the great historical and allegorical group of which the "Isabella" was meant for a beginning. The general regulations bar her out in some way and so her wonderful work in the Arkansas building is but a labor of love. "And so it ever has been with the artist," she said as we stood in front of the beautiful alto relievo of the Spanish queen. "What is it that Hogarth says? Ah, it is like this:

'What various woes the painter's life assail—
Pride, envy, want, the patron and the jail.'"

"It is better now, very much better—especially for great painters. But sculptors never get rich. They all lack the hoarding faculty. And they are so generous. Why I have been in Italy now seven years and I could tell you such moving things about their generosity to each other and the unfortunates who fail. What a pity I could not finish that group here—what a pity. You see Isabella was to be the central figure. Above should be allegorical figures of America, India, the ocean or what might be suggested as the idea developed. Then Columbus to her right, and to her left—who? Well, well, it might be Ferdinand. And the supporting back was to be a model of the Alhambra—ah, the Alhambra, such a beautiful setting for the grand queen who wept for the conquered Boabdil and then pledged her jewels for Columbus. I wanted it to remain here in marble—my pride, my joy, in Chicago always."

"But do you make the copies in marble of your works."

"Only the finishing. That is necessary for the artist who conceives the design. It is not possible for one to convey one's complete idea to another and then there are many difficulties. A German will make a German face, an Italian an Italian face and so of all. And the Italians put such a look of distress on the faces of their women. See! Those women in that group look so very sad."

"I had often remarked that of the Russian paintings, but did not of the Italian."

"Ah, you will see it more and more as you go on. But I want to say something particular now and I can't make you understand it. It is not many who have such command of language—(at this point the reader must imagine this writer as blushing)! There is an idea, a conception of the face which the artist gets and can never give it to any other one. There was General Grant—ah, that firm, noble face! I got the conception of it all in a flash after sitting and hearing him talk a few minutes. Once you get that it is never lost. But sometimes you cannot get it. It just won't come. Then the figure will be a failure. It is in vain to carve the mere form of the features. That is only chiselwork. It is not real art. The result is a failure if the grand conception is not there and sometimes it just will not come."

All this time ladies were coming and going, interviewing the sculptress or bidding her goodby. One of her friends was leaving for Philadelphia, another for Paris and quite a group for Florence, as they had done the fair; but all talked English and in answer to many questions, Mrs. Brooks said:

"I am in the Arkansas building because I am an Arkansas artist, and proud of it. It was on our plantation in Phillips county, just nine miles from Helena, that I made my first nine pounds of butter and modeled it into the figure that gave me fame. And the people there called it—'The Butterhead!' Now I like that name, but didn't then. My daughter, Caroline Brooks Green—and I think she is very talented—was born in Helena. My husband who died a few years ago represented the county in the legislature, but our plantation life was the great thing. I own the plantation now, but I cannot say that I have a home at present. I had previously modeled in everything workable, in clay, sea sand, mashed potatoes, putty and so on; but I have never found anything equal to butter—you can do anything with it. Yes, I began my best work in butter, and with butter I shall end and now I call my Iolanthe the 'Butterhead,' because that name was given by the people."

"Did you not have a regular course of instruction?"

"In some things I did. I was thoroughly grounded in anatomy and made, O, hundreds of models of the skull. When I was a child I drew pictures and made rude paintings before I could read. My teacher in oils was John Frankenstern, of Springfield, O., and I believe I was the only pupil he ever had. He was my master. I am a native of Cincinnati. My best work? Well, it is as the public decides, isn't it? The Vanderbilt group is much admired. It was modeled in butter and finished in marble with the chisel entirely. But we will not talk of best work yet. There are so many points in art I have not mastered that I feel weak. I have not attained the height where an artist should sit. And I cannot now till I take a good rest and begin anew with enthusiasm. I have worked incessantly for seventeen years. Now I must take a good rest. Then will come new powers, new conceptions and then—ah, then I have hopes."

"There is an awful responsibility in art. Just see how many American women come and hold up their little children to see that Isabella and tell them about who she was and what she did for us—how important it is that the true idea should be conveyed by it. My works are scattered to the ends of the earth and the thought of the responsibility is overpowering, if an artist really knows and feels the divine central truth. Thousands, O, tens of thousands of people look on a statue and get an impression that affects them while life lasts. That impression is often a bias for life, too. What a tremendous responsibility! * * * Columbus and Isabella are both from portraits, but I had to search long to find a portrait of her that fell in with my conception. I naturally expected to find her picture in every part of this fair, but came to find none! At any rate, none I could use. How very strange that the butter sculptress of the Centennial should have to come all the way from Italy to make a bust of Isabella! And I made it in five days. But I am taking more time for the Columbus as my agreement here is to work before the public at least an hour every day."

Following the directions of Mrs. Brooks and the catalogue I found her best groups in marble, and found also, somewhat to my displeasure, that she was credited to New York. And so it goes all through the building. The work and the artist are classed, not as from his state to which he may be a great honor, but to some city in which he worked or studied. Her marble productions there are four: "The Dreaming Iolanthe," No. 21; "Lady Godiva," No. 22; "Lady Godiva Returning," No. 23, and "Vanderbilt Group," No. 24. It is not in my line to describe them, and it has already been done to satiety, but I was particularly charmed with No. 23—the pose of Lady Godiva, the action shown in the attitude of the horse, the outlines and general arrangement all looked beautiful to me. But I shall not try to tell why I like it as my education in art is not so far advanced.

I must have progressed a little, however, for I saw several beautiful statues which I had not noticed on former visits, and here again I found a state defrauded of its just credit. Many years ago a sturdy Illinois marble cutter, a German named Triebel, observed in his twelve year old boy a wonderful fondness for the cherubs and other heads carved on the tombstones, and by and by he discovered some very clear ideas in the boy as to their form and a quick perception when an error was seen. So some sacrifices were made to educate the boy and finally he went abroad, and now we have here no less than seven pieces credited to Frederick E. Triebel, of Florence. They are Savonarola (No. 121) and Donatello (No. 122) in plaster bas-relief; Mysterious Music (No. 123) in bronze; marble busts of General Logan and Rev. E. B. Russell and two marble groups entitled "Love Knows no Caste" and "The First Fish." All are beautiful, but Illinois is not honored as she should be.

I made another discovery—that gallery No. 4 is historic. In it are the paintings produced in this country before and during the Revolution. Indeed, till long after that great event. And painting began early in America, for in 1729 John Smybert painted a picture of the noted Bishop Berkely and his family, and the catalogue says this was the first painting containing more than one figure done in America. What it may have been I know not, but it isn't pretty now. It is, however, of the greatest interest, for this is that Bishop Berkely who wrote the oft quoted lines about

"Westward the course of empire takes its way."

And about whom Byron wrote,

"When Bishop Berkely said there was no matter,
And proved it, 'twas no matter what he said."

So it is really quite appropriate, as likewise quite a striking coincidence, that the painting of him and his family should have been the first and should be shown in this place where his prophecy is so gloriously fulfilled. Benjamin West comes next in the list, and he was born nine years after Smybert painted the Berkelys, so there must have been a generation without a great artist. Smybert was an Englishman, but West was born in Pennsylvania and used to tell many interesting stories about his early experience, somewhat as the enthusiastic Mrs. Brooks does, as per interview above. Eighteen years after West, to-wit in 1756, Stuart and Trumbull were born; they follow West in room No. 4, and to them we owe our beautifully idealized portraits of George Washington. I almost forgot John Singleton Copley who was contemporary with West. After Stuart and Trumbull came Peale and Allston and then American artists began to multiply. So No. 4 is a very interesting room, indeed.

Our outside fun has been sadly marred by what some people call the too early arrival of the equinoctial storm. It knocked things around in the water quite lively and the last visitors to cross the lake swore by all the dry land deities that they would stick to the railroad hereafter and give old Neptune the go-by. When I reached the Court of Honor where the great afternoon show was to have been, and where 20,000 or more people were to have viewed it, all I could see were a few ladies running before the wind and one gentleman frantically chasing a fugitive hat. But the display that night was better than a circus, for when anything meant to be very dignified is made ridiculous it is ridiculous indeed.

It was to have been a show of history in floats on the lagoons; but Columbus had to wear a heavy overcoat, and George Washington sneezed like a hay fever patient and Ferdinand and Isabella looked as if, were the thing to do over again, they would let this country stay undiscovered. But the "hardest looking man on the job" was the Aztec king whose long hair was blown all about his face, while even from the shore one could see that his red-legged courtiers were shivering like the proverbial shorn lamb when the wind is not tempered. The whole thing did not lack much of a burlesque, but many thousand spectators looked on and cheered lustily, either determined to be pleased or willing to show their appreciation of the spirit of the performers. The attendance is still increasing. All the landlords report every room engaged from the 15th on and more wanted, and so it is pretty clear that the attendance for September will average 150,000 a day, Sundays omitted. The Sunday opening is best illustrated by an old story, thus: "Boy, boy," said the deacon, "you do very wrong to fish on Sunday." "It cain't be no 'arm, sir; for I ain't cotched nothin'." The religious public must forgive the managers for Sunday opening, for they have "cotched nothin'."

We noticed Walter Burridge, of Tecumseh, here Monday.

Mrs. Kotts, of Manchester, was in town Monday afternoon.

Charlie Mensing was out Saturday afternoon. He has had a run of fever.

A. B. Van De Mark has been quite ill for several days, from a billious attack.

Dow Draper has bought Ed Clark's interest in the livery of Clark and Draper.

Wm. Arnold and Martin Zimmerman, of Tecumseh, were Clinton visitors Monday.

Mrs. Eugene Palmer has rented the Ed Rose house, and expects to move in at once.

Ted Coddling, Fred Koernig and Jas. Kehoe jr., returned from the Chicago fair, last week Friday.

Henry Chase's family have moved back to Clinton from Ypsilanti. Mr. Chase will not return until spring.

Eugene Van DeMark returned home Saturday from Hudson and vicinity, where he had been on business.

The town is putting down a cement cross walk from Demuth's to the drug store. A much needed improvement.

The Clinton vs. Tecumseh Base Ball game last Saturday, on the Clinton grounds, resulted in victory for Tecumseh. Score 7 to 4.

We wish to commend the new electric light superintendent on the increased brilliancy of the street and other lights. The board, in choosing Mr. Neil Williams, made no mistake.

Fred Sherwood started for Grand Rapids, Monday noon, where he goes as a delegate to the Maccabees Convention. His wife and sister-in-law, Miss Nellie Embler, accompanied him.

Rev. Reeves left Thursday for Grand Rapids, his future home, where he has children living. He has a house rented for some time but was not ready for occupancy, hence the delay in moving.

C. H. Fabrique went to Jackson Monday noon, where he was joined at night, by John Machen, and they took the night train for Chicago, where they will see the sights of the World's Fair.

C. S. Burroughs has been appointed a member and Secretary of the Board of Town Site Commissioners for the Territory of Oklahoma. The board consists of three members. Mr. B. has been ordered to the Pawnee Agency, Oklahoma, and will depart for his post Saturday. Mrs. Burroughs came back from Chicago Wednesday, a little earlier than expected. The other members of the party will return Friday.

Mrs. Monroe is fortunate in having a house over her head, after one thinks of what might easily have resulted had it occured in the night, instead of early Sunday morning. She has an upper chamber that is used for storing purposes, and at about eight o'clock a dense smoke was seen raising from the roof and through the window, and upon investigation there proved to be an incipient conflagration going on among some rags, etc. Water was hastily procured, and the neighbors succeeded in subduing the flames, without material injury to the house except the smoking it received.

The N. Y. "Herald's" New Home.

The glory of the new Herald building is in its press-room and power plant, which stand in full view of the public. This wonderful system of machinery is interchangeably operated by steam or electricity. Two huge black marble switch-boards, glittering with brass levers, control the electric force. When steam power is undesirable the huge dynamos are brought into play, and when everything else fails, a turn of the wrist connects the operating mechanism with the electric lighting mains in the street. In this way there can be no failure in the press-work or lighting apparatus. There are ten electric motors. The capacity of this department is illustrated by the fact that there are more than eighteen hundred sixteen-candle-power lights in the establishment, not to speak of the various electric elevators and ventilating fans.

Of the eight massive presses two are intended to print in four colors. Each press prints two colors simultaneously. The Herald's immense press, which turns out more than sixty thousand copies an hour, will be on the Thirty-sixth Street side. It is the most improved and productive printing machine in the world. The press-room has an aggregate capacity of a little above two hundred and eighty thousand sheets an hour. The whole course of the white paper is in full view from the street, as it spins from the damp rolls in continuous webs, flashes between the whirling cylinders, turns, reverses, enters the marvellous folding apparatus, and finally appears, pasted, folded, counted, and ready for delivery. The machinery is so exquisitely adjusted on its rock foundation that there is scarcely a vibration to be noticed when the whole mechanical department is in full swing. No other press-room approaches this one in the perfection of its equipment and the swift interchangeability of its various parts. The lightness and airiness of the space, and the orderly, logical arrangement of the engines, motors, and presses, all combine to make this part of the Herald establishment a model for the world.—Harper's Weekly.

Information concerning the school can be had by addressing M. P. McGregor, 30 McGraw building, Detroit.

Here an opportunity is afforded the student to combine the work of the school with that of the office, so that the practical and the scientific elements of his education may progress together. To this end all exercises of the college are held in the evening and students are also encouraged in securing work during the day in suitable law offices in the city. They are also encouraged in attending the various courts, so far as this does not interfere with their other duties.

CLINTON vs. TECUMSEH.

The second game of the series between Clinton and Tecumseh came off Saturday afternoon on the Clinton grounds. A warm game was anticipated and an immense crowd gathered to see the sport, and for once the realization fully equalled the anticipation. Clinton strengthened their team by securing the services of Walsh, of Toledo, as pitcher, and Leary and Wright for second and third base. Tecumseh braced up their infield with Hackett, of Battle Creek, for second base, and Tray for short-stop. Tecumseh was first at bat. Tray secured first by being hit with a pitched ball, stole second and third and scored on Hackett's single. Hackett went out at third. Dixon struck out. Lee made a single and scored on Schofield's passed ball. Heidenrich struck out. (2) Schofield took first on an error and stole second. Hause went to first. Schofield scored. Wright made a sacrifice hit and Hause scored. Leary got four balls and went to first, getting second and third on Rogers' sacrifice hit and scoring on a passed ball. Carpenter was on third and Hollenbeck on second when Gillen struck out and the score was 2 and 3 in Clinton's favor. During the remainder of the game Clinton saw the home plate but once, in the fourth inning, when Hause got base on balls and scored on Walsh's single. Whelan made a three-base hit for Tecumseh in the fifth and scored. King scored in the sixth. Tray and Dixon in the seventh, and in the eighth Whelan finished the job by putting the ball so far out in the right field that he got back to home plate without catching breath.

To say that an enthusiastic crowd was in attendance is drawing it mild. First the admirers of one side would give vent to their feelings in a yell at which a Comanche might turn pale, and shortly after the other side would see an opening for lung exercise. At one time the game came nearly to a standstill on account of excessive enthusiasm in the ninth inning. As a general thing, however, good nature prevailed, as it should. The summary of the game is as follows:

Struck out by Walsh 14. By King 14. Hits on Walsh 10. King 5.

Clinton has 4 runs, 4 singles, 1 two-base hit, 2 sacrifice hits, and 5 errors.

Association has 7 runs, 8 singles, 1 three-base hit, 1 home run, no sacrifice hits, and 8 errors.

A HEAVY FAILURE.

One of Grand Rapids' Oldest Furniture Houses Suspends.

Its Losses in World's Fair Enterprises Cause the Collapse—The Firm's Liabilities Estimated at $400,000—Some of the Creditors.

COULDN'T MEET PAYMENTS.

GRAND RAPIDS, Sept. 9.—Heavy losses in collapsed world's fair hotels and inability to secure payments from others not collapsed forced Nelson, Matter & Co., one of the oldest furniture houses in Grand Rapids, to give chattel mortgages aggregating $179,382.74. Real estate mortgages to the same parties and for a like amount were also filed. These papers were executed to secure local creditors and Michigan banks. The foot up about $200,000, making the company's total liabilities about $400,000. The assets will probably exceed that sum.

The heaviest bank creditors are the Grand Rapids national bank, $45,500; Old national bank, $29,400; People's savings bank, $15,700; Fourth national bank, $4,100; Fifth national bank, $3,000; Grand Rapids savings, $7,100, and Michigan state bank, $5,000, all of Grand Rapids; First state and savings bank of Howell, $3,900; Big Rapids national bank, $14,000.

Ever since the world's fair hotels furnished by this company began tumbling right and left it has been in a critical condition financially. It was hoped that the worst was over and that it would manage to pull through. A few days ago a sample line of goods carried by the company in New York was attached, and this precipitated a raid by worried eastern creditors.

There is talk of granting the company an extension of time on its overdue paper. In any event the business will be continued by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The mortgages cover everything including real estate, plant, stock and manufactured material.

The world's fair hotels in which the company sustained the heaviest losses were the Windermere, Lacota, Imperial and one other. They decline to give figures, but it is said in one case the total exceeded $40,000. In addition the company has large sums tied up in other Chicago hotels which are doing business but have not been able to liquidate their indebtedness.

LENNON EXONERATED.

The Jury Holds That the Captain Was Justified in Killing Michael O'Brien.

DETROIT, Aug. 8.—The coroner's jury in the inquest of Michael O'Brien brought in a verdict that it is believed will check the attacks by Seamen's union delegates on non-union crews of vessels. O'Brien was shot by Capt. Lennon, of the schooner Reuben Doud, on board that vessel while leading an assault on the non-union crew. The union officials made a strong effort to have Capt. Lennon bound over for trial, but the coroner's jury brought in a verdict of justifiable homicide and exonerated the captain of the charge of manslaughter. The inquest occupied three days, and both sides were represented by able counsel. The jury was out only ten minutes.

BLOWN THROUGH A FENCE.

A Man Killed and a Boy Fatally Hurt by a Boiler Explosion Near Detroit.

DETROIT, Sept. 8.—The boiler of a thrashing machine outfit exploded with terrible force in the barn of James Brown on the six-mile road east of Woodward avenue. John Roberts, the engineer, was instantly killed. A piece of iron struck him in the neck and tore out the jugular vein and a large piece of flesh, and the body was blown through a board fence 50 feet distant. A German boy aged about 12 years was blown fully 100 feet and sustained fatal injuries. Several others were slightly injured.

Legislators Barred.

LANSING, Sept. 9.—Attorney General Ellis has filed another important opinion. No member of the present legislature, he says, can hold any office under appointment by the governor or any state board, for the purpose of perfecting any work or improvement required by virtue of any act passed by the legislature of 1893. The prohibition extends one year after the expiration of their term of office, that is, until January 1, 1896.

The Clover Crop Short.

LANSING, Sept. 11.—Michigan is one of the four states in the union producing the most of the clover seed crop and surplus. The crop has suffered from dry weather and grasshoppers, and promises are very poor. The crop of mammoth is a trifle below an average, and medium will be less than two-thirds of an average. There is generally twice as much medium raised as mammoth.

Y. M. C. A. Convention.

BATTLE CREEK, Sept. 11.—The state convention of the Y. M. C. A. will be held here from October 12 to October 15. Gen. R. A. Alger and Rev. Dr. D. D. MacLaurin, of Detroit, are among the speakers.

Chicago's Sights.

Every visitor to Chicago should see Lincoln Park, which is probably the most attractive resort of the kind in the country. It is situated immediately on the lake shore, is easy of access, and the home of the beautiful in nature and art. Among its special attractions are its lakes and lily ponds; its conservatory of rare plants; its electric fountain; its monuments to the memory of Lincoln, Grant, Schiller, and others; its artesian wells; its floral designs, walks and drives; and last, but not least, its collection of wild animals, which is said to be second to few in the world. The Park is free to visitors at all times, and its landscapes, hills and unequaled views of Lake Michigan make it restful to the eye, while its amplitude of seats gives assurance of physical comfort at the same time. The authorities in charge will be found ready to answer questions, and direct strangers to the various objects of interest.

TWO DAYS ONLY.

CONSULTATION AND EXAMINATIONS FREE

If you are interested in the condition o your eyes, call on the noted Dr. Galleher. He is an expert in his profession. Eyesight is precious—more valuable than any other of the special senses. The Docter has treated in the last 12 months more than 3,500 cases of all forms of eye trouble and errors of refractions, such as Glaucoma, Ulceration of the Cornea, Granulation of the lids, Presbyopia, Paralysis of Accomodation, Spasm of Accomodation, Hypermetropia, Aphakia, Myopia, Astigmatism, Anisometropia, Strabismus, Diplopia, Asthenopia, etc. Have you ever stopped to think how many people in this world are blind from their own negligence and carelessness in not giving their eyes attention at the proper time? You now have the opportunity of consulting one who gives all his time in treating cronic eye trouble. Thousands of persons in this world that do not use glasses that should, then again there are thousands of persons using gasses they think suited to their eyes, but the truth of the matter is, the glasses do not correct the trouble, but aggravate it and produce headache, spots before the eyes, inflamation, granulation, winking, trembling spells, various nerve and brain affections, catracts, burning and smarting of the eyes, etc., entailing not only positive injury to the sight, but untold misery and blindness. Dr. Galleher makes examinations that few in this country can make. He has instruments with which he can examine every muscle and fibre in the inside of the eye. He can tell you in an instant after examining your eyes whether he can benefit you or not, and will truthfully say so. It should be understood that Dr. Galleher is well known throughout the Eastern States as a practical and successful electrionist. He invented some of the finest electrical appliances ever imported to this country. Remember that Dr Galleher does not give one drop of medicine. He is the only man in America who has the exclusive sale of Dr. Edgar Scott's Positive Catarrh Cure. An instrument put up of compressed and medicated gasses, which is Dr. S's own invention. Dr. Galleher also has appliances which will remove a tape worm in from two to four hours or no charges made. Testimonials of the best people in this country at his room at the hotel. Call early and secure convenient hours for free consultation and examination.

This is the second of a series and promises to be excelled by none. There are eight contestants busily preparing, and appropriate music will be plenteously interspersed. Let everyone come out and hear what local talent can do on short notice.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

The fourth meeting of the club was held September 14th at the residence of the president and the topic discussed was, "City Government," including the duties of the officers.

The September Crop Report.

The following figures taken from the last Michigan Crop report shows the severity of the drouth during the past two months.

The drouth now prevailing in southern Michigan is without a parallel. There has been no general rain since about the 22d of of June. Light showers have afforded only temporary and local relief. The average total rainfall in June was below the normal, and there was a further deficiency in July. Complete returns for August have not yet been received, but the weekly bulletins of the State weather service indicate that the average rainfall for August was about one-half the normal.

At Lansing an accurate record of rainfall has been kept at the office of the State board of health since and including 1879. This record shows a total rainfall in July of this year of 0.98 of an inch, and in August of 0.73 of an inch, a total for the two months of only 1.71 inches. The least amount recorded for the same months in any former year was 2.61 inches in 1887. The average for the two months in the fourteen years previous to 1893 is 5.91 inches. Compared with this average the deficiency in 1893 is 4.20 inches.

At the State Agricultural College in 1864 the rainfall in July and August amounted to 1.65 inches. The least amount recorded for the two months in any year since 1864, previous to 1893, is 2.39 inches in 1887.

The severity of the drouth has been greatly increased by bright sunshine. There was very little cloudy weather during July and August. The percentage of sunshine is uniformly reported in excess of the normal.

TO CONNECT ADRIAN AND YPSILANTI.

Below are the salient portions of an interview with Mr. S. D. Nesmith published in Tuesday's Telegram. He seems to be very confident that the project of an electric road, which he has been working up, is going to succeed. Here is what he says:

Samuel E. Nesmith, the enterprising young electric hustler, of Macon, is in the city, to-day, stopping at the hotel Emery.

Mr. Nesmith is full of electrical talk, and says he has purchased the Adrian Electric Belt road under contract to take it as soon as a thorough line from here to Ypsilanti is finished.

When asked by a Telegram man at noon to-day how he was getting along with the proposed connecting link between this city and Ypsilanti, he opened our eyes by the statement that the right of way had all been secured, and every detail attended to. He was here to-day waiting to see the capitalists from Philadelphia who were to put their money into the enterprise having made an appointment with them to stop over here on their way home from the World's Fair.

"Well, what is there to it?" asked the scribe. "This thing is so sudden I can't quite understand it."

"That's all there is of it," replied the gentleman. "Just as I havo stated it. We have the right of way from this city to Ypsilanti for the building of an electric railroad. We have purchased the road in this city, and the roads at Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor. The whole thing will be placed under one control, and we expect before snow flies to be in operation. Looks gigantic, doesn't it? But it is an assured fact, and work will soon commence."

"Which way do you propose running?"

"We shall take the highway and run along the space between the wagon track and the fence. The land is simply waste property, can just as well be utilized as not. We shall reach Adrian from Tecumseh, through Raisin Valley, past the Industrial Home and Main street. The franchise is already owned by the Adrian company, and consequently will be ours when the time comes. The road will be 60 miles long, all told, and will be the longest electric road in existence when completed. We expect to put on eight large cars, with baggage room in one end, and run a car every hour. It will take three hours to run to Ypsilanti. The fare will be two cents a mile outside the cities, tickets issued in books of 250 miles, five cent fare being used in the cities. There will be a general overhauling of the system here when we get possession. The General Electric Company's idea will be used, and everything will be in first-class shape. A power house will be stationed at Tecumseh, Saline, Ypsilanti and possibly here."

WE MET OUR WATERLOO.

The Giants of Battle Creek Walk Off with Both the Tuesday and Wednesday Games.

The ball games Tuesday and Wednesday between the Association and the Battle Creek Giants both resulted in victory for the latter. The first game was in no sense of the word a good one, but the second day both clubs played better ball. When one looks over the Battle Creeks season score book and notices the teams with which they have contended it is considerable consolation to think our boys kept within hailing distance.

FIRST GAME, TUESDAY.

The wind blew very hard all through the game, stirring up clouds of dust for the benefit of both players and spectators. The game opened with Tecumseh at the bat. Letcher hit an easy one to Russell and went out at first. Lee hit a safe single but was crowded at third and put out at the plate. Schofield got base on balls, stole second and scored on Whelan's hit to Russell. Dixon went out at first. Loose playing gave Battle Creek 5 scores in the first inning, and the advantage gained here was felt all through the game. In the second, Hinkley rushed in the second tally for Tecumseh. The Giants failed to score. Tecumseh did not gain any in the third, fourth and fifth, while Battle Creek secured six runs. In the sixth Battle Creek did not score, and Tecumseh went ahead two, Whelan and Dixon scoring. Russell scored for Battle Creek in the seventh and Hoyt in the eighth, and King and Dixon for Tecumseh in the eighth. Summary: Struck out by Haben 11. By King 3. Hits on Haben 4. On King 12. The Giants had 13 runs, 9 base hits, 3 two-base hits, no sacrifice hits and 10 errors. Tecumseh had 6 runs, 1 base hit, 3 two-base hits, 3 sacrifice hits and 8 errors.

SECOND GAME WEDNESDAY.

Battle Creek at bat. The first man was given base on balls. In stealing second he was caught on a forced run, but through some carelessness on the part of the baseman and a leaning of the Umpire he was called safe. Hoyt got first and both scored on Mulhern's sacrifice; Russell struck a single and Mulhern scored. Whalen and Egan hit fly balls and were caught out. Mackey struck a single and Russell scored. Cushman struck out. For Tecumseh Letcher hit a fly to short stop; Lee hit to second and was put out at first, and Whelan struck to short stop and went out at first. Hoyt and Mulhern scored for the Giants in the second. In the fifth Whalen and Egan scored and in the eighth Hoyt. Otherwise it was scoreless game for both sides until the last half of the ninth, when Letcher hit a safe single, stole second and scored on Lee's hit to third; Lee was put out at second; Whelan struck a fly to third and Dixon struck out. Summary: struck out by Mackey, 10; by Dewald 4; hits on Mackey 2; on Dewald 9. Giants have 9 runs, 8 base hits, 1 2-base hit, 2 sacrifice hits and 3 errors. Tecumseh has 1 run, 2 base hits and 6 errors.

A NEW TARIFF BILL.

PREPARING A REVISION OF THE CUSTOMS SCHEDULE.

Prospect of a Heated Debate During the Coming Winter—That Blessed Baby. Facts Regarding the Little Stranger Are Hard to Get—Unwholesome Curiosity.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—Now that we have reached the end of the tariff hearings before the ways and means committee, it is important to learn what the policy of the committee is to be as to the preparation of a new tariff bill. Chairman Wilson informed your correspondent today that he and his colleagues would get to work at once upon their difficult task of preparing a revision of the customs schedules. Mr. Wilson said that if the hearings had any influence upon the committee it was to increase their conviction, not only that the schedules need revision, but that this is a good time to undertake the work.

"I must confess," said Mr. Wilson, "that a few weeks ago several members of the committee, including myself, were in doubt as to whether this were a good time to undertake general tariff revision. The financial troubles which were then sweeping over the country seemed to indicate that the business interests would, for a time at least, welcome escape from any change of customs duties which might affect their operations and the values of their raw materials. But now that we have heard from a considerable number of manufacturers, importers and producers, we are convinced that in many lines this is a better time to make changes of the tariff than if it were a season of great activity and prosperity.

"Manufacturers are now to a certain extent recasting their lines, reorganizing their forces and proceeding, so far as the future is concerned, with great caution and care. Therefore this is a fitting moment to revise the tariff schedules so that the reorganization, the formation of new plans and the making of contracts for the future on a new basis of tariff may all come together. Of course I cannot say how much revision we shall undertake. We now have the evidence before us, and the committee will proceed with great care and conservatism. We wish to injure no one nor to add to the burden of any interest, and yet to keep always in mind the demands of the people for lower tariffs.

"People who do not live in Washington, and who do not come to this city occasionally to see how things are done, have little idea of the difficulties that are in the way of the preparation of a tariff bill. Were our committee ever so radical, the influences to which it is subjected by senators, representatives and others of both political parties would tend to keep us in conservative lines. Probably we shall be able to finish the construction of our bill within six weeks, and during the coming winter of course there will be another tariff debate in both houses of congress."

Another Tariff Debate.

It is understood here to be the policy of the managers of the house to curtail debate upon the coming tariff bill, restricting discussion to perhaps two or three weeks; hence it is not impossible that the new tariff bill will go through the house and reach the senate in the latter part of November. The discovery has been made that the radical silver senators hope to be able to prevent the passage of the repeal bill until the tariff bill comes over to their body. In order to do this they will find it necessary to filibuster most desperately, but they are desperate, if one may judge by their expressions. Senator Stewart of Nevada, the grizzled warrior of silver, says, for instance, that he alone and single handed can prevent action in the senate for a period of 30 days.

Senator Stewart's Threat.

"And I will do it, too," he adds, with a significant thump of his brawny fist upon his desk. "I have filed away for many years the speeches of Republicans and Democrats in the house and senate, and I have at my finger's end now about a cord of speeches in favor of free silver made by men who are now trying to urge this iniquitous measure through the senate. When I get ready, I will send speech after speech of this kind to the reading clerk, and when this clerk drops down in his tracks exhausted I will send for another clerk; when he gives up, we shall have a third one, and how are they going to take me off my feet and reach a vote? If it were necessary, I could keep this up all winter and fill the hospitals with reading clerks, but I don't think that will be necessary. Public opinion is changing, and the people who a few weeks ago were rampant for passage of this bill to destroy silver are now turning the other way. We'll beat them yet."

The White House Baby.

There is a great desire among the society women at the capital to see the new baby at the White House, but as yet only a few of Mrs. Cleveland's intimate friends have had the pleasure of beholding Baby Ruth's sister. President Cleveland has been very much annoyed by the notoriety given to the little stranger. The president is very much opposed to newspaper gossip about the members of his family. Mrs. Cleveland agrees with her husband in this, and professional gossipers as well as women newspaper correspondents find a very cold welcome at the White House now. Mrs. Cleveland declines to be interviewed even by the best women writers and deliberately discourages and frowns down all efforts to obtain facts and incidents from the White House home circle.

The contrast between the White House now and under the late administration is very marked. During the Harrison regime the women correspondents and letter writers were made welcome at the executive mansion. Mrs. Harrison and her daughter and daughter-in-law were always willing to afford help and suggestions to the bright and industrious women who furnish the public with news about the occupants of the White House. While it cannot be said the Harrisons courted notoriety of this sort, they sensibly recognized the fact that public interest in the presidential family is always very keen, and that no harm whatever can come from satisfying this curiosity.

President Cleveland, however, thinks much of this curiosity is unwholesome, and that any gratification of it is to be suppressed. He cannot see why the birth of a baby at the White House should attract any more attention than the birth of a baby in any other home in the land. The general opinion here is that the policy of the Clevelands in this respect is rather extreme, and that the efforts made to conceal facts and prevent publicity are wholly unnecessary. So rigidly are the lines drawn at the White House that the women writers who have described, or pretended to describe, the appearance of the new baby and wardrobe have been compelled to draw very largely upon their imaginations for facts and details.

A UNIQUE ASSEMBLY.

ALL RELIGIONS EXTEND THE HAND OF FELLOWSHIP AT CHICAGO.

Roman Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Mormons, Brahman, Buddhist and Parsee All Singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—By the courtesy of Dr. John Henry Barrows, I was one of the 200 or more guests the other evening at the reception accorded the orientals at the residence of Mr. A. C. Bartlett, and there was assembled, I do verily believe, the most unique group ever seen on this western continent. In the place of honor, between Dr. Barrows and the hostess, stood the venerable archbishop of Zante, the Most Rev. Dionysius Latas, magnificent in his robes of office, and both in facial aspect and physical manhood looking the born ruler of men. On the other side of the doctor stood Bishop Keane, and all around were Parsee, Hindoo and Chinaman, Protestants of many denominations, and here and there one of us common men—a journalist, or a lawyer, or the like—to modify the tone of the picture.

Interesting Contrasts.

When the formal presentations were over and the people began to scatter through parlor and hall and form into groups, there was a moving panorama of colors, races and faiths. A high priest from India, clad in snowy white from turban to slippers, talked earnestly and in excellent English with a Methodist preacher from Missouri, who looked as if he had just stepped out of Peter Cartwright's biography and into Lorenzo Dow's clothes.

The resident and other Christian guests were chiefly Chicago's Four Hundred and in the highest style of evening dress, among them Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Charles Henrotin, Mrs. Annie Besant of England, Miss Jeanne Sorabji of India, Principal G. M. Grant of Canada, ex Senator Lyman Trumbull and many eminent lawyers, preachers, doctors and other persons of note. The hall decorations consisted of the flags of various nations and flowers from many climes. Music added its charm, and when one looked on the odd combination of ultra fashionable city people with plain country preachers, Catholic priests in their clerical habit and orientals blazing with color or resplendent in snowy white, the thoughts excited were beyond the power of words to set forth. But it was one of those rare occasions in which dress cut no figure, and if a plain newspaper man felt too conspicuous in his everyday clothes he only had to back into a corner and strike an attitude to be mistaken for a distinguished foreigner. Surely such another assemblage was never seen out of India, and probably not there.

All this is but preliminary to some notes on the parliament of religion, which is by common consent regarded as the greatest success of the age. Consider these facts: Out of several thousands invited from all parts of the world, less than a score positively declined; out of 170 who promised to be present and talk or send papers, only three failed, and of those who sent their names to be recorded as actually present all were in the city on the opening day except five. It is seldom, I think, that our national congress is so full on opening day, and yet these people have come from the ends of the earth. Of course such an extraordinary gathering has inflamed ardent Christians, excited enthusiastic humanitarians and set the superstitious to forecasting. A talented Adventist of the radical school has already proved to his own satisfaction that this is one of the signs that the end of the dispensation is nigh, for when these people return home "the gospel will have been preached unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

A Catholic Affair.

The true catholicity of this affair and its world representative character may be shown by a brief outline of its proceedings to date. The separate Catholic congress ended on Sunday, the 10th, and next day the great parliament convened in the Hall of Columbus, in the Art institute, every available space being filled with spectators, while thousands were turned away. On the platform was at least one representative of every faith except Mormonism and fetichism (if faith the latter be), and bishops of every Christian body which is episcopal in government. All joined, 3,500 voices at least, in singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," Jew and Jain, Brahman, Buddhist and Parsee singing as freely as Methodist and Catholic.

Then followed the Lord's Prayer by Cardinal Gibbons, nearly all the assemblage joining; an address by President Bonney, the patriarchal blessing by Archbishop Latas of Zante, Christian, Buddhist and Shintovist bowing together as he raised his hands; the address of welcome by Dr. Barrows and responses by Archbishop Feehan, Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, D. D.; Harlow N. Higinbotham, P. C. Mazoomdar of India, Prince Wolkovsky, H. Dharmapala Minas Cheraz (Armenian), Swama Vivekanda (Jain), Miss Sorabji (Parsee), Pinchaud Raghavi Gantul and Bishop Arnett, colored. Oh, it was worth a year of common life to witness such a union.

On Tuesday presentation of beliefs was made, the most interesting addresses being by Rabbi Wise, Rev. Maurice Phillips of Madras, Hon. W. T. Harris and Shaku Sozen. Universal regret was felt at the absence of Hon. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, as his title runs, for he is the lineal descendant in the first born male line of the great Ali, companion of Mohammed, and is the only well known man of that blood who has adopted Buddhistic views. His paper was well read, however, and received with applause. On Wednesday Hon. Pung Kwang Yu of the Chinese legation at Washington expounded Confucianism, Zit Luzen Ashitsu told of Buddhism in Japan and Kinza Ringe Hirai of the same country told us of the influence of Buddhism in promoting a moral life. On this and each succeeding day Christian teachers alternated with those of other faiths, but there was no controversy—only presentation of views.

Religion Versus Irreligion.

On the next three days the principal lecturers were Rev. Lyman Abbott, Rev. Joseph Cook, Takayoshi Matsuyama and Reuchi Shibata on Shintoism, Cardinal Gibbons, Julia Ward Howe, Protali Chunder Mazoomdar, Virchand R. Gandhi, Mrs. Eliza R. Sunderland and Pauriu Yatsubucho. The paper of Errad Sheriarji Dadabhai Baruchs of Bombay on Zoroastrianism and the prize essay of Kung Hsien Ho of Shanghai on Confucianism were read, as they were not present. These are but specimens of many addresses given and to be given in this parliament, the object of which is, according to the call, "to unite all religion against all irreligion, to make the golden rule the basis of this union, to present the substantial unity of many religions in the good deeds of a religious life," etc. Was there ever a year before 1893 when such a parliament could have been held?

A TRAIN ROBBED.

Four Masked Men Make a Big Haul Near Houghton.

In Broad Daylight They Stop a Train on the Mineral Range Road and Force the Express Messenger to Give Up $70,000.

BANDITS IN MICHIGAN.

HOUGHTON, Sept. 16.—The express car of the Mineral Range passenger train which left Hancock at 9 o'clock Friday morning for Calumet was "held up" and robbed by bandits a half-mile from Boston station about half an hour later. The robbers secured $70,000 in cash, money intended for the employes of the Calumet & Hecla copper mine, for whom to-day was pay-day. The money was drawn Friday morning from the First national bank of Houghton and the Superior savings bank of Hancock. The express car was in charge of D. B. Hogan and there was no special guard.

The train was going at the usual speed and was within half a mile of the little station called Boston, 5 miles from here, when a man stepped into the middle of the track and flagged the train. The engineer quickly applied the brakes, no thought of train robbers entering his mind. The man disappeared behind the station house, and as the train stopped two women passengers got off. At that moment a masked man jumped on the locomotive and pointed a revolver at Engineer Schuler and ordered him to stop. The engineer thought he was fooling or was a lunatic, but the gun went off, the ball whizzing past Schuler's ear. The fellow pushed the engineer into the corner of the cab and grabbed the air-brake lever to keep the engine moving slowly. He opened the throttle slightly, showing perfect familiarity in handling an engine. Fireman Sutherland jumped out of the cab window and was met by another robber, who came from in front of the engine and fired at him, ordering him back on the engine on pain of instant death.

Two more robbers had in the meantime got upon the front end of the express car and with a sledge smashed in the car door. They ordered the express messenger to put the contents of his safe in a bag which one of the robbers carried. The messenger immediately complied and handed out some $70,000 consigned to the Calumet & Hecla mine.

After securing the booty the robbers fired a volley, and the one who was guarding the engineer and fireman ordered the former to "go ahead, quick." He did. The affair was a complete surprise and the passengers knew nothing about the robbery for some little time. The express messenger and the train crew acted as though paralyzed with fear, and their cowardly conduct is already subjecting them to considerable criticism.

Among the passengers on the robbed train was a messenger from the First national bank at Hancock, who had in his possession $40,000 for one of the banks at Red Jacket. No one knew he had the money, which was carried in a handbag, until his excited actions gave him away.

The authorities at Hancock and Calumet were notified of the robbery as soon as the train could be pulled into the town and pursuing parties were hastily organized. It was two or three hours, however, before really formidably posses could be put on the trail, a sufficient time to enable the robbers to get a good start.

The place selected for the outrage was a short distance from this town, at a wild spot. Indeed, the whole country hereabouts is wild and broken, and they could not have found a place that was not adapted by nature for a robbery.

Jack King, the great Cornish wrestler; John Kehoe, a sport, and Jack Challew were seen driving very fast into town about 10 o'clock, and persons near the Boston station saw a horse corresponding in color to theirs tied up near the station. These men and a man named Gorman were thereupon arrested and the clew against them seems to be a very strong one. The prisoners were put under $10,000 bonds, in default of which they were placed in jail. A man named Butler, from Marquette, was also arrested Friday evening.

Richard King, brother of the Cornish wrestler, was seen flashing a large roll of bills at Hancock Saturday night. His arrest has been ordered. Champ Kehoe has also been arrested on suspicion. William Pinkerton, with five detectives, is at Hancock, and some important developments are expected shortly.

Give Silver a Chance.

Silver may not be very good money, as we are constantly being told. It may be worth but 55 cents on the dollar, and it is a wonder that it is worth that with all the power and legislation of the country for years devoted to belittling its value. But one fact remains clear in spite of all the learned talk about the superiority of the gold dollar over any other kind of money, and that is that the silver dollar goes everywhere to-day in this country for 100 cents, and the banks are as eager to take it as any one at that price. All we have run across lately are ready to take all the silver dollars they can get at par, and the only thing that worries the average citizen is his inability to get all he needs. Just give silver a chance and it will be found a very good friend of the public indeed.—Ex.

In Chicago the relations between home and happiness are gauged by the success a man has in keeping his relations away from his home.

A MILLION FRIENDS

A friend in need is a friend indeed, and not less than one million people have found just such a friend in Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds. If you have never used this great cough medicine one trial will convince you that it has wonderful curative powers in all diseases of the throat, chest and lungs. Each bottle is guaranteed to do all that is claimed or money will be refunded. Trial bottles free at Orr's drug store. Large bottles 50c and $1.00.

The silver Senators are willing to fight to prevent even ten minutes of time being employed. Delay is all they can hope for.

ASTHMA CURED.

Dr. Taft, proprietor of Taft's Asthmalene, Rochester N. Y., will send to any of our subscribers suffering with asthma, a trial bottle of Asthmalene Free, who will send him their post-office address. The Doctor is known to be reliable and his remedy a most valuable one; it is endorsed by many medical publications and used in all parts of the U. S., Europe and Australia.

Wichita Falls, Texas, March 11th '93. Proprietors P. P. P.

It becomes my duty to add my testimonial to the wonderful curative properties of P. P. P. (Prickly Ash, Poke Root and Potassium). Some years ago I bruised my ankle on my saddle stirup; from a little scratch, the place began to enlarge until it was as large as the palm of my hand, discharging pus and exposing part of the bone. I called to see physicians and they pronounced it as a fever sore and incurable. It became so painful and swollen so badly that I tried bandage for relief until I secured a rubber supporter, after securing the rubber supporter for temporary relief, I began to use internal remedies trying several different kinds without any relief. I resolved to try P. P. P., which I did; after using one bottle the result was such I continued until the sixth bottle was used when my rubber supporter was not further required as the sore was completely healed and the swelling entirely gone. I therefore take pleasure in saying to the public generally that it is my belief from actual experience that the use of P. P. P. if properly persisted in will cure any case of impure blood or blood poisoning.

Respectfully
Prof. B. F. Hickey,
Postmaster.
Wichita Falls, Texas.

I, the undersigned knew Prof. Hickey at the time he commenced to take P. P. P., for his sore leg, and I did not think a cure possible. I noticed its progress from the start, and must say the remarkable cure P. P. P., brought about was something marvelous.

CONGRESS OF RELIGION.

The Scheme Resulted from a Sort of Accident,

BUT HAS PROVED SUCCESSFUL.

From Appearances All the Races of Man Are Just Now in a State of Doubt or of Revived Enthusiasm—Claims of the Buddhists—Some Coming Celebrations at the World's Fair.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 15.—[Special.]—No event for years, possibly no event in history, has proved so sudden and surprisand its projectors were almost carried off their feet by it. It is not generally known, but the scheme resulted from a sort of accident, and its inception and evolution were on this wise: First, as soon as congress voted that Chicago should be the place for the fair the ministers of this city by a common impulse resolved that they would waive all claims to a summer vacation and not only do their best, but call in extra help. They have kept the promise nobly and I am sorry to add that the people have appreciated it a little too well to suit my convenience. I have not been able to get within ten yards of a hearing at Mr. Moody's, and at Dr. Barrows' church I found at least 400 people leaving for want of room.

It was decided also that tent meetings should be held near the fair's gates and that so far as possible the missionaries of the various societies should have their home vacation and that there should be preaching by them in Turkish, Greek, Italian, Chinese and possibly some of the India languages. Only part of this programme has been carried out, for the plaisance people are confessedly the most irreligious of their several races and Sunday is the day when they do their wildest, as, though the gates are open, no other part of the fair is really on exhibition. Out of this plan, however, grew that of a religious congress and to Dr. Barrows more than any other one man must the credit be given. The world was ripe for it. It appears that all the races of man are just at this time in a state of doubt or a state of revived enthusiasm and are either ready to re-examine the grounds of their faith or eager to set them forth to others.

The Japanese are in effect a nation of agnostics. Their higher classes express disbelief in any supernatural agency whatever or a cool indifference to all faiths. There is a general skepticism in China. The missionary spirit seems to be reviving again among the Mohammedans, but among their most active men religion has taken on a semi-scientific cast. Babu Protab Chunder Mozoomdar, the first Hindoo to give his views here, says that the progressive Hindoos hold almost exactly the same views as the Unitarians of this country. He is the founder of the Brahmo Somaj, or worshippers of the one supreme God, and is at present the guest of some religious families here. The Buddhists in like manner admit that new movements are going on among them and smilingly claim that there are more Buddhists in the United States than there are Christians in China and Japan. In short the whole world is in a state of religious unrest and the parliament was an assured success almost as soon as it was proposed.

The missionaries in heathen lands were unanimous in its favor, the great leaders of Christendom nearly so. The names of those willing to serve on the advisory board soon reached 1,500. Prominent among its promoters in distant lands are such men as Professor Isaac T. Headland of the Imperial university at Pekin, Rev. J. S. Chandler of Madura, South India; Rev. George D. Marsh, American missionary in Bulgaria, Rev. George T. Candlin of Tientsin, China; Rev. Yoshijas Hiraiwa of the Methodist seminary in Tokyo and leader among the native Christians, and others. The leading native members of the bar in India took a great interest in it and one of them, still a devout Brahmin, wrote, "The time is at hand when the best religion must come to the front." Of course he added that he did not fear comparison. Of the old and retired missionaries it is claimed by the managers that every one has been an enthusiastic advocate of the congress.

Mozoomdar, as the Babu above named is usually called, arrived a week before the congress convened. With him came H. Dharmapala, who is the guest of prominent Christian families and Veerachand Gandhi, who is the honored guest of Dr. Barrows. He is a priest of Jainism and was elected a representative here by his fellow priests. He has not yet said enough for us to comprehend the difference between Jainism and Buddhism or Brahminism. Another of that party is B. B. Nagarkar, Brahmin priest, who is the guest of Marvin Hughitt, well known in railroad circles. All these gentlemen speak English with clearness and fluency and are not at all backward in giving their views to newspaper men. As they traveled together from India by way of London, did the World's fair together and are sociable and pleasant guests in the same Christian families, it would seem that there is not such a painful separation of sects as we had supposed "on India's coral strand."

Ottoman Empire day at the fair was the seventeenth anniversary of the accession of Sultan Abdul Hamed I. to the Turkish throne and every Turk, Egyptian and loyal Armenian got himself up regardless. Somewhat to my surprise a few Greeks also took an interest in it, as there are still nearly as many Greeks in Turkey as in Greece. The Dutch celebrated on the birthday of little Queen Wilhelmina and their orators told us some very good things about the Dutch settlement of New York and how they established religious liberty in the new world. Today the railroad representatives are making a grand racket over the formal opening of the Manchester railroad sixty-three years ago. New Mexico has her little demonstration tomorrow, but it is stated that fewer people are here from that territory than from any other or any state in the Union. The native Mexicans are not a traveling people and the Americans, chiefly silver miners, feel tolerably poor just at present.

On the 20th Iowa will parade through the grounds with Governor Boies at the head of the line, and, as they claim, some 30,000 people from that state on view. The state cadets will show their training on the 21st and Governor Boies and others will speak. On the 27th Indiana will do herself proud and the silvery tones of Senator Voorhees, Ben Harrison and others will be heard. If it is possible for him to come, the old man eloquent, Colonel Richard W. Thompson, will also be with us and give us his personal recollections of the day in 1816, when Indiana was formally admitted to the Union. Of course Governor Matthews, his brows bound with the laurels of the late militia victory at Roby (where the prize fighters retreated without firing a shot) will lead the procession. The granger states are now swelling the admissions well up towards the 200,000 mark daily. The stock pavilion is jammed and the great cow contest and steam churns attract even larger crowds than the Art palace.

By fits and starts, as it were, I have been searching out Canada's exhibits in all the buildings for a month, and trying to get them classified. This for two reasons—I just naturally like the Canadians and they [illegible] the ordinary expectations that a special feature should be made of their show. In the fisheries it is of course to be taken for granted that they excel all others, as that is their specialty; but it is really a surprise to find them so near the head in horticulture. The finest apples come from the Annapolis valley in Nova Scotia, and Ontario displays thirty-eight varieties of that fruit with 1,400 bottles of preserved fruits, including such things as strawberries, peaches, pears, raspberries and others we are accustomed to think of as southern fruits. Still more surprising is the fact that cold Quebec displays seventy kinds of fruit including many fine apples, and that the native wines of Canada are ranked high by the judges.

In like manner display of agricultural products was only what was to be expected, as that is her great industry. Her 10,000 square feet in the mines department is thickly set with displays of nearly all known minerals, gold, coal and nickel leading in importance. The survey in the remote northwest is far from complete, but it is known that in that prairie region there is coal enough to supply all the deficiencies of timber and run the manufactures and transportation for many thousand years. British Columbia reports her gold yield to date $53,000,000 and manfully insists that the world must look to her for its future coin material, for she has just opened her quartz veins and learned how to work them profitably and by the formation knows that she has enough for the world's needs for ages. South Africa comes back at her with a statement that she has recently discovered and proved a gold reef twenty-three miles long, which contains more of the yellow stuff than was mined in California and Australia both, and that before many years gold will again be "depreciated" as compared with silver. In fact, she, South Africa, will take the contract to make it so. But as Kipling says, that's another story.

It is matter for unceasing wonder that in the latitude of Winnipeg, where the ice is five feet thick, the valleys of British Columbia have the winter climate of Tennessee, with roots and fruits, grains and flowers to correspond. But here are specimens of them to prove it. She also has as much good lumber "in the green" as all the United States east of the Mississippi, a fish export to the value of $2,500,000 annually, inexhaustible beds of coal and fertile valley land sufficient, so she claims, to support the population of England in comfort. In short, according to her very gentlemanly but somewhat enthusiastic agent, if that province were settled like France is it would take a respectable rank among the second-class powers of the world. "No other country in the world, sir, is the equal of it for hops; it has just that moist, mild atmosphere of the great hop country in southeastern England, only better, and yet agriculture is, as I may say, only started."

It goes without saying that in the Forestry building Canada's exhibit is peculiarly fine. Her white and red pine have found their way to all parts of the world and her harder woods, which take so fine a polish, are almost equally noted. All the world has heard enough, however, of her far western forests; but it may surprise some to learn that the great hardwood forests of Ontario and Quebec are scarcely touched as yet, and that the production of maple sugar is a great industry. In the Transportation building Canada excels in sleighs, of course, and one of the curiosities there is a beautiful model of the sleigh presented by the women of Canada as a wedding present to the Duke of York and Princess May. Other curiosities are ice boats, snow shoes, folding boats, racing canoes, toboggan outfits and a dozen other things in the sliding line.

And all this brings me back to my favorite "fad"—that the inventions of men to overcome climate give far more pleasure than the climate gives pain, and therefore to really enjoy himself a man of wealth should winter in Montreal and summer in the Bahamas. Then he would have a steady thing and know what to depend on. Having tried both I'll take my oath that there is ten times as much fun in Minneapolis in winter as in New Orleans, for the furs and the sleighs, the hot drinks and the glorious dinners (and how a man can eat and drink there!) the life and vivacity and intellectual sparkle in that zero-and-below air far more than recompense one for any climatic inconvenience—that is, if he has plenty of money.

J. B. PARKE.

Caravels Transferred to Uncle Sam.

Sept. 12 was a day of universal interest at the fair, as on that date the Columbus caravels were presented to the government. The ceremony attending their presentation was both appropriate and impressive. The honor of receiving them from Captain Concas was accorded Captain Berry, of the Michigan, by the secretary of the navy. Lieutenant Welles, who has been attached to the Latin-American department of the fair, was placed in immediate command of them. The caravels were manned by recruits, Captain Berry having received orders to enlist the necessary number of men to take charge of the boats, and to supplement them from the crew and officers of the Michigan to whatever extent necessary.

These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 6 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more obstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump, water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO. 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

GALVANIZED it is not enough to make portions of a windmill galvanized, as the Steel Wheel makers do, for the parts exposed edges and rivet heads will rust, and the whole being complicated, that is absolutely protected from rust and decay.

The Aermotor Pneumatic Water Supply System enables you to supply every part of your house with water without an Elevated Tank.

NOTES FROM THE WHITE CITY.

JACKSON PARK, Sept. 17, '93.

Will you direct me to the Michigan building? The question was asked many times last Wednesday. A small family came in at Cottage Grove Avenue gate at the west end of Midway Plaisance about 9 a. m., and when about a block down the street the woman of the party stopped to ask a guard the usual question. She forgot to express her astonishment at the distance to Michigan's home at the fair, for then the boys started on the run for the Indian dance in front of Sitting Bull's log cabin and her husband who had lingered behind, called her to come back and see the Bedouins in the exibitions they give to attract the visitors to their show. The poor woman did not know whether to follow husband or children, and sat down to wait for their return. When they finally got together it was decided that they would not visit any of the Midway attractions but would make their way as fast as possible to the main grounds. We will follow them and notice some of the things they saw: A little farther down the street the shouter for the Lapland Village informed them, "They are all alive in here; these strange little people from that far off, frozen country where nothing grows but the moss upon which the the rein-deer feeds. They are here, the reindeer and the dogs." And just across the street the man who grows poetic over the advantages to be derived from a visit to the ostrich farm, calls out in trumpet tones for the benefit of several young ladies just passing; "Byron says' Sweet as the voice of girls the song of birds." These ostriches won't sing you any songs, but they are very beautiful and "a thing of beauty is a joy forever." The next stop is in front of Dahomey where the black fellows are giving a song and dance on the platform above their enclosure. And across the street again the Chinese orator is telling of the wonders of the Chinese village. He is quite an interesting talker if you can understand his queer broken English. I often stop to hear him, and now with the party we are following, we listen to something like this: "Well what you come to World's Fair for? To learn all about the people of the earth; about Europe and Asia and Africa. You have seen all the other places, now why don't you come in and learn about the heathen Chinee? When you go home your friend say: "Well what you see at World's Fair, and you say: "Oh! I see Manufactures building, Lincoln Park and I see big wheel;" then your friend say, "What about the China village?" You say you passed it by, and your friend so sorry, he say that the best part of World's Fair, then you sorry too, but it too late, never happen again. Now I can tell you about your country, about your customs, your religion, your education. What can you tell me of my country? Not much. You going to let Chinaman get ahead of you? Now why don't you come in and find out some idea of poor heathen Chinee?" We get past the Algerian village with out a stop although the enterprising fellow who sells "Bum Bum" candy, and calls his trade in the following expressive words, prove quite an attraction for the boys; "Bum Bum" candy, very good candy, pretty nice candy, cheap, cheap; Bum Bum candy five cent." The Ferris Wheel came for its share of admiration, and then our journey was comparatively uneventful except that the dense crowd made progress slow. The Turk who makes the candy, called Hot! hot! hot! as usual, and by the way, that cry is likely to have a wide spread run. Nearly every one who visits Midway gets it, and the visitors are from every part of the country. Another ambitious Turk, in front of the Turkish theatre, called as he clapped his hands and jumped up and down in frensied desire to gain attention, "Welcome, welcome, dancing girls, dancing girls, welcome."

By the time the Michigan building was reached it was long after noon, and the little party after looking in vain for vacant chairs, sat down on the grass, tired and hungry. Lunches were in order, and after the rest in that shady space between the Wisconsin and the Michigan buildings, and disposing of the contents of the little paper boxes they carried, our party was again ready for sight seeing

The exercises at the Michigan building were not elaborate. There were speeches by some of Michigan's prominent men, and in the afternoon a reception to Gov. Rich. Lemonade was passed out freely to all thirsty visitors. In the evening dancing was the feature, and those who did not care to attend the fireworks on the lake front spent a very pleasant evening tripping the light fantastic toe. Thursday evening the fireworks in honor of Ohio were very fine. The bombardment of Fort McHenry, which had to be postponed from Maryland day on account of the high wind and the roughness of the lake, called forth the most enthusiastic applause.

I took dinner to-day with the Algerians in the kitchen back of their village. We had roast beef and a dish consisting of potatoes, cabbage, onions and rice, all cooked together. The rice was dished out separately and a sauce like our chilisauce poured over it. The dinner itself was not bad, but the surroundings were not calculated to stimulate a delicate appetite. However it does not seriously affect me to see men scratching their dirty bare feet at the table, and then taking their share out of the common dish with the fingers. Perhaps it would if I had not had my share of the meal dished out by itself. As it was I rather enjoyed it and finished a hearty meal with a large glass of Algerian wine. To one who has the opportunity of seeing that part of the daily lives of the foreign people here, which is not open to public inspection, it is an education that cannot be acquired by the ordinary visitor.

It is confidently expected that the

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Some Things Worth Seeing and Where To Get a Good Lunch.

Between the Live Stock pavilion and the windmills, south of the great Agricultural building and overlooking the lagoon, stands a large rectangular structure called the French Bakery. Here are exhibited wonderful bread making machines (one of which is capable of furnishing the staff of life to 500,000 people each day) and ovens of French manufacture, which are a revelation to our bakers.

"The proof of the pudding is the eating," as the old saw has it, and the proof of machinery is the quality of the articles produced; therefore the exhibitors are manufacturing bread and pastry of every description before the eyes of the spectators. They sell these goods at a nominal rate, and serve you the best cup of coffee on the grounds for a nickel. Not satisfied with this liberality (considering that they have to pay 45 per cent blood money to the exposition) they offer a free ride on the Intramural railway to every one of their patrons spending thirty cents at the bakery. In other words, a person gets thirty cents worth of the finest French bakery goods for twenty cents, which is the best argument why visitors should by all means patronize this, the fairest and squarest of all eating places at the Fair.

Using the Intramural ticket thus provided by the liberal management of the French Bakery, and taking a north train, one should stop at the Midway station. Passing many interesting shows previously described in these columns, we come to a circular edifice, ornamented with a delicately carved facade, the famous Panorama of the Swiss Alps. It took thirty months and twenty-five eminent artists to paint this huge canvas, which measures 500 feet in diameter and stands sixty-five feet high, making it the largest painting ever conceived and accomplished. So faultless is this magnificent reproduction of the wonderful Bernese Alps, that one can readily transport oneself to Switzerland, away from the din and noise of Midway Plaisance. A delightful Swiss trio of Alpine singers and genuine Alpinehorn artist add yet to the illusion. This stupendous work was executed purposely for the World's Fair, and is the only exhibit at the Midway Plaisance that has obtained a medal from the jury of fine arts. This very fact is sufficient proof that the Swiss Alps panorama is one of the best exhibits on the grounds and should not be missed by any visitor to the Fair.

Leaving the panorama in a westerly direction and to the right of the great Ferris wheel, we come to another marvel of French skill, the Eiffel tower exhibit. The great success of the Paris exposition in 1819 (which numbered a total attendance of 44,000,000) was due in large measure, to the celebrated Eiffel tower, nearly 1,000 feet high. A French engineer, Mr. C. DuPasquier, exhibits here an absolutely correct reproduction of this gigantic tower. This miniature copy cost $100,000, is composed of over 600,000 pieces of bronze, and is justly considered the most complete and most artistic reproduction known. There can be seen elevators running to the several platforms, a revolving search light on top of the tower, over 1,000 of the smallest incandescent electric lamps ever made, living gardens crowded with pigmy people and better yet, an electric fountain spouting several hundred fancy colored water jets. This work is so astounding in its scope that it is impossible to describe it adequately either with tongue or pen. To add to the comfort of the spectators, the management has established a cafe in Parisian style where the inner-man can be accommodated and from which a magnificent view of the Ferris wheel and Midway Plaisance is obtained.

The Detroit and Cleveland Steam Navigation Company's new steamers City of Alpena and City of Mackinac are now in commission, making four trips per week between Detroit, Mackinac Island, Chicago and way ports. Fare, Cleveland to Mackinac and return, including meals and berths, $20.00; Toledo, $14.50; Detroit, $13.50. Low rates to Chicago. Write for illustrated Pamphlet. Address A. A. Schantz, G. P. A., Detroit, Mich.

DEATH OF HON. W. S. WILCOX.

Hon. Wm. S. Wilcox, of Adrian, who has been critically ill with an attack of pneumonia for the past two weeks, departed this life on Friday evening of last week. The deceased has been one of the prominent citizens of Lenawee Co. over half a century. No man has stamped his individuality more emphatically upon its business history, and no man would be more sincerely missed from its business circles. We gather from the Adrian papers the following particulars about his death and funeral.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

W. S. Wilcox was the son of Austin and Clarissa Wilcox, and was born in the town of Riga, Monroe county, N. Y., on the 25th day April, 1819. When he was yet a child, his parents moved into the town of Bergen, Genessee county, that state, where he lived on a farm, a stage line, and the post-office, his son assisting in the work. In the year 1836 the undaunted boy left the old home and started west to seek his fortune.

He came to a halt in Milan, Ohio., where he secured employment as a clerk in the dry goods store of Ira Bidwell where he remained for a short time. He arrived in this city in 1836, and reentered the employ of Mr. Bidwell, who had removed his stock of goods from Milan to Adrian. In 1840 he became a partner of Mr. Bidwell and the firm of Bidwell & Wilcox continued until January 1844, when the latter disposed of his interest to the former.

In the spring of that year Mr. Wilcox began business for himself, putting upon his shelves and counters an entire new stock of goods. He continued in this business until the year 1855, a portion of which time he had for partners J. H. Bodwell and William D. Tolford. In that year he sold his goods to Bodwell, Carey & Clay, the two latter being former clerks. In 1848 he was elected village treasurer, which office he held for one year.

Soon after discontinuing the dry goods business he started a hardware store, under the firm name of Wilcox & Chappell, which firm continued for about eighteen months, after which, purchasing the interest of Mr. Chappell, he continued the business alone until 1867, when his brother Henry became his partner. This firm existed for 5 years under the name of Wilcox Bro. & Co., when George A., son of W. S., became a partner. He continued his interest in the business, although from 1880, his brother and son had its principal management, until the organization of the Wilcox Hardware Co., in March 1889, when William A. Staniford was added to the firm.

In 1865 he was elected mayor of Adrian. In the fall of 1870 he was chosen state senator, and held the office for one term, during which time he was the chairman of the finance committee. In 1869 he was appointed state prison inspector by Gov Baldwin, and was immediately chosen president of the board. In 1866 he was elected president of the Michigan State Insurance company, which position he filled for seventeen years. Up to the time of his death, and for many years he was president of the Oakwood Cemetery association.

In 1880 he became one of the owners of the Commercial Exchange bank of Whitney & Wilcox, which on June 1st of the present year was reorganized into the State Savings bank. Of this institution Mr. Wilcox was president.

In 1864 Mr. Wilcox was elected as member of the legislature of Michigan, and served two terms. During the second term he was chairman of the committee on ways and means the most important committee in the house.

He became an active member of the fire department in 1841, and continued in the same until the paid department was organized, having served for twenty-one years. For nearly half a century he was superintendent of the First Baptist Sunday-school, and in that school has instructed the third generation.

Mr. Wilcox was first married in Benton, Ind., to Miss Sarah Frances Clay, daughter of Rev. Bradbury S. Clay, by whom three children were born, two of whom died in infancy, the survivor being Geo. A., the only remaining son.

The first wife died on the 12th of February, 1852, and the second marriage took place on the 17th of August, 1854. On that day he was united with Miss Josephine Southworth, of Avon Springs, N. Y., who survives him.

THE FUNERAL SERVICES were conducted at the family residence, on South Main street last Monday afternoon.

The sad occasion was a veritable outpouring of grief at his departure, and his friends by hundreds attended. All morning long, from 10 to 1 o'clock, there was a string of Adrian people calling at the house to take a look at the features which had been so familiar about the streets of Adrian. The remains were situated in the north parlor during the hours friends were permitted to view them, and during the funeral services they rested in the large hallway.

Rev. Dr. J. S. Holmes, of Bay City, his former pastor and close friend, assisted Rev. Wilson Whitney, present pastor of the Baptist church, and Chaplin Hickok, of the Jackson prison, who was in charge of the religious branch of the work there all the time Mr. Wilcox was president of the prison board, was also present.

After the service the long line to the cemetery was taken up, where, after prayer and a brief service, the last look upon the receptacle holding all that was mortal of he who had lived and honored his manhood was lowered into the ground in the family lot.

The bearers were as follows:

Active—Judge R. A. Watts, Adolph Wheeler, Hon. W. J. Cocker, Major S. E. Graves, C. E. Weaver, W. C. McConnell, Hon. A. D. Gilmore, H. V. C. Hart.

Honorary—Abel Whitney, Hon. Norman Geddes, Hon. Martin P. Stockwell, Hon. B. Shaw, J. I. Calkins, L. H. Salsbury, A. H. Wood, J. H. Bennett, H. E. Waldby, Joseph Wesley, E. S. Holdridge, Gen. Wm. Humphrey, Warren Gilbert, John I. Knapp, F. J. Hough, J. V. DeFoe, A. J. Dean, Major R. B. Robbins, Ex-Mayor Bean, Dr. Daniel Todd, Geo. L. Bennett, Dr. F. R. Seger, John G. Mason, Chas. Redfield, Howard Sickels, E. O. Grosvenor, of Jonesville, L. Lilley, Tecumseh; Samuel Post, Detroit.

Memorial services were held last Sunday at the Baptist church in Adrian. Mr. Wilcox had served as superintendent of the Baptist Sunday-school for fifty-one years, and the memorial services were held by both church and Sunday-school.

The Common Council and the Y. M. C. A. passed appropriate resolutions on his death.

U. OF M. VS. TECUMSEH.

The University boys crossed bats with the Association on our grounds, Saturday and were defeated by a score of 5 to 8. Ann Arbor's went first to bat, and their first three men struck. For Tecumseh, Lee hit the ball but went out at first. Whelan struck out, McKinney got to first on balls, stole second and third and scored on McKenzie's passed ball. King went out at first. The University had no better luck in the second and third inning than in the first, while Day scored for Tecumseh in the second, and Tray and Dixon in the third. In the fourth, Hartman, U. of M., got first on an error, worked to third while Voorhies was batting and scored on Manana's sacrifice hit. Tecumseh failed to score. In the fifth both sides went ahead two tallies, McKenzie and Hartman scoring for the University and Tray and Dixon for the Association. In the sixth, seventh and eighth the University failed to score but in the ninth Voorhees and Lewis got home. The sixth saw another of Whelan's home runs and Tray scored for the third time: the home team did not play the last half of the ninth.

Summary—struck out by King 12; by Mahana 10; U. of M., had 5 runs, 5 base hits, 1 two-base hit, 1 sacrifice hit and 6 errors. Association 8 runs, 6 base hits, 3 2 base hits, 1 home run, 1 sacrifice hit and 4 errors.

FRIGHTFUL WRECK!

Chicago, Sept. 19. Nine people were killed and twenty injured last night by a fearful rear-end collision between two sections of the Big Four train, known as No. 45, near the village of Manteno, a few miles north of Kankakee, on the line of the Illinois Central railway. An Illinois Central passenger train had stopped to take water at a tank a quarter of a mile north of Manteno. The first section of train No. 45 came to a stop, but it is said that no flagman was sent back to flag the second section of No. 45. It is a straight track for two or three miles and if a flagman had been sent back the engineer of the second section could not have failed to see him. On the other hand, it is said the engineer of the second train was asleep and that the fireman was throwing coal into the firebox. Both engineer and fireman saw the train ahead of them just in time to jump. They had a narrow escape for their lives.

The first section of train No. 45 left Chicago about 8:15 o'clock. It was followed a few minutes later by the second section. There was a "dead" sleeper on the rear end of the first train, or, in other words, the car was empty. The car ahead of it was the day coach and contained some forty or fifty passengers. The second section of the train crashed into the "dead" sleeper, driving it forward through the day coach, and it did not stop until it had completely telescoped the car from end to end.

The wreck was the worst that has occurred on the Illinois Central system for twenty years. Several of the injured are beyond recovery and it is probable that the list of fatalities will be swollen to fourteen. Several of the unknown dead are thought to be prominent men of Cincinnati and adjoining cities in Indiana, Kentucky, and Ohio. The bodies were mutilated and unrecognizable. A train conveyed the wounded to Chicago, where ample preparations had been made by the police department to remove the injured to the hospital, and with all possible haste under the circumstances they were taken out of the cars, placed on stretchers, carried to the waiting patrol wagons and driven to St. Luke's, where a corps of physicians was ready to give them medical attention. The dead had been removed to Kankakee.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

Naturally, every patriotic American wants to go to the Columbian Exposition, and will go, if possible; and, just as naturally, the impossibility of going makes the desire all the stronger to see the beauties and wonders there displayed. Whether one goes or not, a souvenir of the grandest Exposition of all time is a desirable thing to have; and no more complete or beautiful one can be had than the September number of Demorest's Family Magazine,—the Exposition number,—which contains over 300 illustrations, showing as much as one could see in a week's visit, and accompanied by vivid descriptions of all points and objects of interest. In fact, 'tis a collection of photographic souvenirs that would cost a lot of money, and yet you may possess it for only twenty cents. Through it you may also become familiar with the city of Chicago as well, for the history of that city is graphically told in "From Fire to Fair," which is also profusely illustrated.

BEAUTY AT THE FAIR

BUT MANY LADIES LOOK RATHER HOMELY BY CONTRAST.

California Is Rushing Things—Fun at the Lake Shore—The Spanish Caravels. Swindled Out of Half a Dollar—An Angry Scribe.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 18.—[Special.]—There is a deal of dry fun in and about the Indiana building in the course of a day. Its position on the great western avenue enables one on the west porch to get a good view of the incoming and outgoing crowds, and to me it is a great consolation to look at them. I see so many people homelier than myself. It is a frequent remark that all the homely people in the United States must have come to this fair, but the women say it is the fair which makes them look homely, partly by contrast with the beauties of art and more because they get so weary and wilted. On the porch I often hear the expression, "If they have any handsome women in this country, they'd better send 'em on, for we've seen enough of the other kind."

At noon in this building there is a sight for the satirist. Every chair and bench is in use, and all available space inside and on the porches is jammed. The managers have had to put up a notice that for luncheon purposes this building is reserved for Indiana people, and there are more than enough of them. Every one is eating as fast as nature will allow. Cheese, pickles, bread and butter vanish as if by magic, and cold chicken goes as if it had renewed its wings to fly where all good chicken goes. Scraps, bones, fruitskins, paper boxes and other lunch holders are thrown upon the floor, for if one tries to throw them out he, especially she, will certainly hit somebody, and when all is over the place looks like a provision store taken by siege and looted by the victorious soldiery.

When the crowd scatters, one looking on the debris feels as if he could never eat again, but in a few minutes the scavengers have it in fairly good condition, and a few of us linger on the porches to rest and smoke. On California day, however, all remained, and at least 30,000 people were wedged into the area between that and the California building, while oranges were thrown to the expert catchers, and many thousand boxes of peaches, pears and grapes were passed out for free distribution. The pushing and scrambling, the "squushing" of fruit and general smearing may be imagined. It reminded me of the stereotyped statement in the old time traveling menagerie: "Keep your seats, ladies and gentlemen! In a very few minutes the animals will be fed." The animals were not all fed, though tons of fruit were given out, but many of them were artistically smeared.

And this reminds me that California is rushing things for her midwinter fair. A department of publicity and promotion has been established here, with Charles Grant Miller, formerly of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, at its head. German, French, Spanish and Italian press bureaus are at work, and several hundred thousand leaflets and other documents have been sent out. The Persian, Turkish, Algerian and Cairo street managers have combined to set up an oriental village for the coming fair, a Japanese village is arranged for, many of the novelties here are to be removed thither as soon as this fair closes, and Minister Thurston has departed for San Francisco to supervise the erection of his Hawaiian theater and panorama of the crater of Kilauea.

I am sorry to say that the fun on the lake shore is pretty much over. Once in a great while some daring and hardy athlete takes a header from the swimmer's tower, but he generally gets out as fast as possible. The slender Cingalese shiver in their pretty pavilion, close the lakeward windows so far as possible and sigh for those spicy breezes which are said to blow softly o'er Ceylon's isle. The Indian quartet still play the marimba occasionally on the lagoon shore, but the spirit is weak, and they seem to sigh for Guatemala. Almost every afternoon about 4 a great bank of cold fog comes rolling in, and the waves dash the spray clear over the high, broad walk. On the evening of California day 100,000 or more gathered there to see the fireworks, but for music there was sneezing. Heavy overcoats and shawls were in requisition, and Harry and Harriet snugged up mighty close to each other regardless of "company manners."

Farther down the lake shore is one of the most interesting sections of the fair, which has until recently been very much neglected. There are the Spanish caravels and other queer shipping, then the La Rabida, the Indian school, the great Krupp gun exhibit, and last, on the southeast, the Leather and Forestry buildings. The exhibit is good, of course, but the catalogues of the last two are unmixed frauds, the meanest petty swindle on the grounds, and that's saying a great deal. They consist simply of the names of the exhibitors and an ad. of their business, without a line of satisfactory description. The list is complete, I presume, but who wants to pay half a dollar for the privilege of reading an advertisement? Nevertheless in the course of half a day in the Forestry I found some very curious and interesting things, especially in the bamboo line. The building itself is the greatest curiosity, as it is the most unique of all the exposition structures and rustic to a superlative degree.

All around it is a veranda of which the columns, which also support the main roof, are tall trunks in their natural state. Even the bark is unmarred. And as the building covers 2½ acres there is space for trees from every state and from every country in the world. The sides of the building proper are of slabs with the bark removed. Windows and doors are made in the same rustic way, and each one represents the woodwork of a separate nation or race. The elaborate finish of the main entrance is a general contribution from the woodworkers of the world, and the roof is shingled or thatched or boarded, just as you please, with all kinds of bark, tan bark being the most prevalent. As to the interior, I need only add that it contains all the woods of the world in all their various forms and finish, including the biggest plank in the world, which is 16 feet wide. I am so vexed about that 50 cents I paid for the catalogue that I won't give the name of the company which sawed it.

In leather the joke is on me. A gentleman told me that he delivered 100 fat steers at the stockyards and saw them killed, skinned, dressed and the meat shipped for New York in a few hours and "might have had a pair of boots from old Brindle's hide if he had said over night." I published it as a joke, then went to the leather workers and found that they do take in a hide just from the steer and turn it into boots in 24 hours—pretty good boots too. They tell me that the tanning takes but 10 hours. And yet we are not happy!

AN UGLY SITUATION.

DEADLOCK ON THE SHERMAN LAW REPEAL BILL.

The Way Out of the Difficulty May Not Be Found For Two Months—Possibilities of a Single Senator For Blocking Business.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—[Special.]—There is no immediate prospect of the passage of the Sherman law repeal bill through the senate. It is difficult for outsiders to understand why this measure meets with such long delay in the senate in view of the fact that it was very quickly put through the house by an overwhelming majority. The situation in the senate is a very peculiar one. It is known that the majority in favor of the bill is considerable, but the minority is able by taking advantage of the traditions and practices of the senate to blockade the way. The tradition of the senate which comes into play in this case is that as long as senators wish to discuss a pending measure they shall have the right to do so, and the vote thereupon shall be delayed until they may have had their say.

There is no known method in the senate by which a vote can be forced, so long as even one senator insists upon his right to speak and practices it. It would therefore be possible for a single senator, if his physical strength and endurance held out, and he were able to speak continuously, to prevent any legislation whatever to which he might be opposed. While this is the extreme form of stating the senatorial tradition, the practice usually is that when a measure has had what may be considered full and fair discussion no further efforts are to be made obstructing its passage.

With this in view, Senator Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee and therefore leader of the repeal forces, has sought to keep the repeal bill constantly before the senate and to permit senator after senator to make his speech thereon, hoping that within a very short time those senators who wish to discuss the bill would have had their satisfaction in doing so. Senator Voorhees has trusted much to the power of public opinion, which seems overwhelmingly to demand immediate action upon this bill. But it turns out that the senator has underestimated the force which public opinion exerts upon certain senators, and that he has overestimated the spirit of moderation among those senators who are opposed to the bill.

In a Deadlock.

We now find ourselves, therefore, after two weeks of dreary discussion, face to face with a very ugly situation. The silver senators have made overtures for a compromise. They have sent word to President Cleveland that any concession on his part as the recognized champion of the repeal bill would be satisfactory to them. They were willing to take the Faulkner amendment, which even the most ardent friends of repeal thought would do little harm. They were willing to take even much less than this if only they could obtain the satisfaction of ingrafting upon the bill some amendment which would at least have the appearance of protecting silver in the future. But President Cleveland and those who stand with him have absolutely refused to even consider any proposition whatever for compromise.

When the president's ultimatum was thus returned, the silver leaders lost their tempers and employed some very lurid and naughty language in expressing their opinion of Mr. Cleveland. They declared that he was using the weapons of patronage and the giant influence of his position to bulldoze one of the legislative branches of the government. They lifted their right hands over their heads and swore by all that is high and holy the repeal bill should never pass the senate so long as they were able to stand on their feet, open their mouths and advantage by the senatorial tradition.

Which Side Will Weaken?

And here we are with a majority amply large enough to pass the bill, but with no immediate prospects of reaching a vote. The question simply is, How long will the administration stand out for unconditional repeal or how long will the silver leaders maintain their present obstructive attitude? Before anything can be done one side or the other, or both, must give way.

This trouble will come from the Republican side of the chamber. The Republicans now stand almost solidly for repeal. They say, however, that they were brought here by the president's call for one purpose, and this purpose was to pass an unconditional repeal of the purchase clause of the so called Sherman silver law. They are willing to perform this duty and no other. Just as soon as attempts are made to legislate upon currency they will cease to present a solid front. Then they will become possessed of varying ideas and convictions, then they who have been hitherto comparatively silent and who have left the discussion largely to their Democratic brethren will wish to make speeches, to discuss and thus to delay action.

The President Will Stand Firm.

It seems clear, therefore, that President Cleveland's only safety lies in persistent and unwavering demand for the passage of unconditional repeal. He has set out for this, and those who know his characteristics are willing to wager that he will never be willing to accept compromise or make concessions.

If the deadlock is to be broken, it seems that it must be broken by surrender on the part of the silver leaders. Notwithstanding their fierce declarations, there are signs of weakness among them. The pressure of public opinion and the pressure of the press are very strong upon them. To much longer delay or ultimately defeat a measure which has been demanded by such a large proportion of the people of the country is a frightful responsibility for an individual or a small number of men to take upon their shoulders.

The Vice President's Position.

And yet from a parliamentary point of view the silver leaders occupy an impregnable position. They can prevent a vote as long as they may wish. The only method by which a vote could be forced upon them would be by relaxation of their alertness and opposition, but they are too experienced to be caught napping. Cloture—a rule to suspend discussion and proceed to a vote—might indeed be passed were the presiding officer of the senate willing to seize an opportunity for putting to vote such a question, but it happens that Vice President Stevenson, while not opposed to the repeal bill, is not enthusiastic in its favor, and it happens, furthermore, that he is radically opposed to breaking down the o tradition of the senate by instituting cloture. He has declined absolutely to put a motion that would look toward forcibly cutting off the right of debate.

Thus we are in a legislative deadlock. A way out of it may be found in one or two weeks, and it may not be found for two months.

THE MACCABEES.

Proceedings at the Great Camp Held in Grand Rapids.

GRAND RAPIDS, Sept. 16.—The annual grand camp of the K. O. T. M. of Michigan, in session here during the week, was an unqualified success. Reports of officers showed the order to be in a most flourishing condition in this state, the membership in Michigan being greater than the combined membership of the next five largest beneficiary societies in the state. During the year past the membership has increased 11,050. During the year there were 233 warrants drawn on the endowment fund, aggregating $340,761. There are now 835 subordinate bodies in the state, with a membership of 53,173. The outstanding death benefits amount to $70,000,000.

The total membership of knights and ladies of the Maccabees in the country is 128,782, a net increase of 37,310. Disability claims of $66,383 have been paid since organization, and death claims aggregating $2,425,510. There are 14,000 members in good standing of the ladies of the order of the Maccabees in Michigan.

Officers were elected on Thursday as follows: Commander, D. D. Aitken, Flint; lieutenant commander, Thomas Watson, Roscommon; record keeper, Robert J. Whaley, Flint; medical examiner, E. B. Tibbals, Flint; chaplain, Henry M. Carey, Manistee. The lady Maccabees elected the following officers: Commander, Mrs. Lillian Hollister, Detroit; lieutenant commander, Miss Bina West, Port Huron; record keeper, Miss Emma L. Bower, Ann Arbor.

The last session was held on Friday, and it was decided to meet in Lansing next year. The most important business transacted was the consideration of an amendment to the laws. Hereafter no liquors of any kind will be sold or allowed to be sold at any ball or entertainment given by the order.

At the Maccabees prize drill the Grand Rapids division won first prize, a $900 cup; Detroit, second, silk banner; Saginaw, third, $50 in money.

FIRE AT BAY CITY.

Another Blaze Among the Lumber Yards Causes a Loss of $250,000.

WEST BAY CITY, Sept. 14.—Fire started at 1 a. m. Wednesday in John Welch's lumber docks and spread rapidly to adjoining property. Before it was got under control at 3 o'clock it had destroyed 2,500,000 feet of lumber. Palling, Hanson & Co., of Grayling, and Fisher & Co., of Bay City, were the owners. There is no doubt that the fire was of incendiary origin, as two explosions were heard just before the fire started. Myron Ball has been arrested on suspicion.

Will Reorganize.

GRAND RAPIDS, Sept. 15.—A movement is on foot to reorganize Nelson, Matter & Co., form a stock company with $500,000 capital, and pay all debts, stop all litigation and go into business again. Local capitalists will take the stock if the plan prevails, and members of the old company will also be in it.

Fire at Marquette.

MARQUETTE, Sept. 17.—The furniture house of Hager Brothers was completely destroyed by fire Saturday. Two adjoining shops were also burned. Total loss, $25,000.

Twelve Buildings Burned.

MANISTIQUE, Sept. 16.—Fire Friday night destroyed twelve business houses and three dwellings, entailing a loss of $150,000, insured for about one-quarter of that sum.

It was a case of fits, cure was perfect and permanent. If you have such an affliction, Fits, Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus Dance or any serious Nerve Trouble, write Mrs. Lena Cooper, 1534 Lorian St., Cleveland, Ohio, to tell you what Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer did for her after she had doctored for eight years and Doctors said her case was incurable. She gratefully says: "Your medicine has done me such great good, I think I ought to be willing to tell others of it." This great remedy $1 of J. J. Orr, Tecumseh, Mich. 1

I was troubled with catarrh for seven years previous to commencing the use of Ely's Cream Balm. It has done for me what other so-called cures have failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Balm seemed magical.—Clarence L. Huff, Biddeford, Me.

After trying many remedies for catarrh during past twelve years, I tried Ely's Cream Balm with complete success. It is over one year since I stopped using it and have had no return of catarrh. I recommend it to all my friends. Milton T. Palm, Reading, Pa.

Chicago's Sights.

Every visitor to Chicago should see Lincoln Park, which is probably the most attractive resort of the kind in the country. It is situated immediately on the lake shore, is easy of access, and the home of the beautiful in nature and art. Among its special attractions are its lakes and lily ponds; its conservatory of rare plants; its electric fountain; its monuments to the memory of Lincoln, Grant, Schiller, and others; its artesian wells; its floral designs, walks and drives; and last, but not least, its collection of wild animals, which is said to be second to few in the world. The Park is free to visitors at all times, and its landscapes, hills and unequaled views of Lake Michigan make it restful to the eye while its amplitude of seats gives assurance of physical comfort at the same time. The authorities in charge will be found ready to answer questions, and direct strangers to the various objects of interest.

Two anecdotes show the difference in the treatment of the present financial situation. A woman who had a deposit of $28,000 went to the bank and drew her check for it. The teller began to pay her in silver dollars. She thereupon rented safety vaults in the building, and had her silver deposited there. She drew that amount out of the circulation and helped clog business to that extent. On the other hand a servant girl asked permission to go out as she wanted to go to the bank. Her mistress offered to lend her the money, but she said she heard that the banks were in trouble and she wanted to go and put in her $4. If the public spirit of the servant instead of the rich woman prevailed, the difficulties would be over in 24 hours.

State Line Pioneer Poem.

I was born in Vermont at the foot of
of the hill,
In a log shanty on the bank of the rill,
Ever a flowing from the old rocky mountain,
Making its way toward the great fountain.

Up and down the clear little brooks
I caught the speckled trout with hooks;
My mother fried their sweet little meats;
Then around the old table all took our seats.

Then over the hills, through valleys fair,
I killed the deer and chased the bear,
I caught the fox and gray raccoon,
But could not kill the shy old loon.

[illegible]
To native land and boyhood days,—
My head was black and skin so fair,
But now so rough and white my hair.

How quick the many years have past,—
Brothers all dead but me, the last.
My time is drawing near its close,—
To-day or to-morrow, no one knows.

When I am gone let every man
Do as much better as he can.
You have a chance to be much wiser;
Be a Christian man and not a miser.

I came to this country in 'thirty-four;
Have kept the wolf far from the door;
And am past my eighty-seven,—
The next I hope will be in Heaven.

Where mother is gone awaiting for me,
And I near the crossing soon coming to thee,—
The swelling of Jordan will bear me safe o'er,
Again with mother on the evergreen shore.

Perhaps this year may be my last.
So now I will write my epitaph,
To be engraved, when I am dead,
Upon a marble at my head:

"Farewell to earth and all its cares,—
Delusive world and Satan's snares.
I hope above them all to soar,

The Spree is Over.

Suppose we stop howling "hard times." The cry has become monotonous, and as a matter of fact it isn't true any longer, even if it were ever justified. People have been crazy and half scared—that's all. Men of wealth have run just as hard and yelled just as loud as the savings bank depositors have. Wages have been cut down and men have been discharged in anticipation of a commercial disaster that has not occurred. Money has been drawn from savings banks and put into old stockings because of an unreasoning distrust. Suppose we resume business again. Currency is beginning to circulate freely. The Sherman law is on its last legs and will soon be knocked over the ropes entirely. There is no obstacle to a complete resumption of business except the lingering remnants of the financial delirium tremens from which we have been suffering. Start the wheels whirring again. Choke off the yawping. Get sober. The spree is over.

We refer to our elegant line of Suits, Overcoats and Ulsters. Never in the history of old Lenawee have the buyers of Clothing been offered such a feast. Our elegant Clay-weave Dress Suits fit "like a duck's foot in the water," none finer. Double Breasted Business Suits made from tailoring clothes. The Doctor has treated in the last 12 months more than 3,500 cases of all forms of eye trouble and errors of refractions, such as Glaucoma, Ulceration of the Cornea, Granulation of the lids, Presbyopia, Paralysis of Accomodation, Spasm of Accomodation, Hypermetrobia, Aphakia, Myopia, Astigmatism, Anisometropia, Strabismus, Diplopia, Asthenopia, etc. Have you ever stopped to think how many people in this world are blind from their own negligence and carelessness in not giving their eyes attention at the proper time? You now have the opportunity of consulting one who gives all his time in treating cronic eye trouble. Thousands of persons in this world that do not use glasses that should, then again there are thousands of persons using gasses they think suited to their eyes, but the truth of the matter is, the glasses do not correct the trouble, but aggravate it and produce headache, spots before the eyes, inflamation, granulation, winking, trembling spells, various nerve and brain affections, catracts, burning and smarting of the eyes, etc., entailing not only positive injury to the sight, but untold misery and blindness. Dr. Galleher makes examinations that few in this country can make. He has instruments with which he can examine every muscle and fibre in the inside of the eye. He can tell you in an instant after examining your eyes whether he can benefit you or not, and will truthfully say so. It should be understood that Dr. Galleher is well known throughout the Eastern States as a practical and successful electrician. A DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Nelson Kuney, of Adrian, Shoots Himself And his Sweet-heart Dies from Fright.

A shocking case of suicide occured in Adrian Sunday night, followed by the death of a young lady, both of the parties being well known in that city.

We gather the following particulars of the sad affair from the Telegram of Monday:

One of the most fearful tragedies that ever took place in Lenawee county, since the Silver's affair in Tecumsen, was enacted in this city last night, which resulted in the death of Nelson Kuney and his sweetheart, Miss Maude Brainard.

The deed which resulted in the death of Kuney was committed on Madison street, at the hour of 9:15 last night, in front of the residence of Rev. J. S. Thrapp. It was at this point, after having some difficulty about inducing his fiance, Miss Brainard, to continue a ride they were taking, to the home of his parents, that he put a ball through his head, and died in an hour.

The two young people had been riding all the evening, and had reached this point in their drive, when Kuney, who had as mentioned above, had some difficulty with the girl, pulled out a revolver, unloaded, and snapped the hammer at her. Miss Brainard made a leap out of the buggy and ran to the sidewalk. Kuney took after her, and capturing the fleeing girl, placed one hand over her mouth, and then carried her back to the buggy. While attempting to place her in the vehicle, his hand slipped from her mouth, and she began to scream "murder."

Mr. Will Jewett, who was out driving with a lady friend, happened to be within a block of the couple, and hearing the screams, drove rapidly to the scene. Just then Miss Brainard broke away from Kuney, ran into the yard of Mr. Thrapp, where she fainted. Kuney then commenced putting his blankets back into the buggy, and Mr. Jewett drove on a short distance, turned around and passed him again. Just as he passed Kuney the second time two shots were fired from the revolver. Kuney said "Whoa" to his horse, after firing the second shot, and fell unconscious under the buggy wheels. His horse did not attempt to move, when Kuney fell unconscious under the buggy.

Mr. Frank Boardman, who lives close by, hastened to the scene, and soon aroused Dr. McElroy at the college. Sheriff Wilson and Deputy Lards were summoned, and on their arrival the body was carried into the yard of Dr. A. W. Seger, on the corner. Dr. F. R. Seger was summoned from the city, and the dying man's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kuney, of Madison, three miles from town, were apprised of the tragedy. Dr. Seger found that the second shot had gone through the brain, entering at the right temple and passing through, fracturing the skull just above the left temple. Kuney lived but one hour after the shot, and was unconscious all the time.

Mr. Kuney was a young man 22 years of age, and lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Kuney, in Madison, about three miles west, on the telegraph road.

When his mother arrived at Dr. Seger's home, she went into hysterics, and considerable trouble was experienced in trying to bring her to a reasonable frame of mind. The dead man's remains were taken home.

As if the suicidal death of Nelson Kuney was not enough, the community was shocked again this morning to learn of the death of Miss Maude Brainard, as a result of the shock caused by the death of her betrothed.

After the first shock had passed, Miss Brainard rallied, and was taken to the home of her sister, Mrs. John Bowerfind on Butler street, by Mr. Will Jewett. On the way to the house she manifested considerable nervousness over the affair, but did not seem unduly agitated.

The young lady has been living with her sister, and was formerly engaged as clerk in Val Fox's confectionery. She discontinued her services in that position last week, however, and was not engaged in any business.

After reaching her home she was attacked with violent vomiting fits and diarrhoea. Nothing was thought of this for the reason that she had been subject to just such attacks since childhood. She became quieter later on, and her sister was soon able to leave her, and attend to her own child, which had become a little troublesome. About five this morning her sister, Mrs. Bowerfind, found Maude in a very weakened state, and summoned Dr. W. E. Jewett. The doctor found his patient with no pulse at all, and but a faint action of the heart. He immediately administered a powerful stimulant, and went back to his office for medicine with which to follow it up. When he arrived at the house he found his patient in a dying condition, and she never rallied, passing away about 6:30.

Dr. Jewett states that it was a clear case of weakened heart from the very severe nervous strain under which she had been placed. There were not the least symptoms of poison, nor can he understand why she should die unless it be from a naturally weak heart.

Mrs. Bowerfind states that nothing was said about the affair, during the night, nor would she permit anything to be said that would agitate her.

It is learned, however, that she stated to a friend that Kuney wanted her to marry him next Wednesday, but that she refused. He then insisted upon her going out to his home, but that she refused to do that, and tried to get hold of the lines to turn the horse around. It was then that he snapped the revolver at her. She threw the blanket back over the revolver and jumped out of the buggy. The balance is told above.

Miss Brainard was the daughter of Frank Brainard the carpenter, who lives on St. Joseph street. She was a prepossessing young lady, with a happy disposition. She had been keeping company with young Kuney for some time, and was understood to be engaged to be married to him.

There is but one reason assigned for the cause of the tragedy, and that is that the two were engaged to be married, and that he was in great haste to be married, but that the woman had been putting the affair off. Last night it is understood that Kuney was endeavoring to make her promise to go to his very evident that he had contemplated suicide, but whether he had intended to kill her when he got into the country cannot clearly be decided.

Kuney borrowed the 38 calibre revolver belonging to Ed West, of College avenue, and Ed had given him two cartridges, the only ones he had. Kuney's excuse for borrowing the weapon was that he wanted to shoot a dog that had bothered him on the road to his home. He did not load the revolver until after Maude had jumped out of the buggy, and she saw him place the two cartridge in the gun.

There will be no coroner's inquest.

PENTECOST POINTERS

Rain at last, but altogether too little of it.

First ice Sept. 20th, one-fourth of an inch thick.

It does not look now as if Michigan would have a very large wheat surplus next year.

Mark Perkins and wife have removed to Onsted, where Mr. Perkins goes into the mercantile business. His neighbors are sorry to lose Mark but all unite in heartily wishing him success in his new enterprise.

Mrs. George Fellars received a telegram recently, bringing the sad news of the death of both her parents, the aged couple dying within five hours of each other. Mr. and Mrs. F. have gone to Athens to attend the funeral services.

A singular incident occurred here last week. While a lady was reading one of the glasses in the spectacles she was wearing cracked in several pieces, one of the particles striking her in the eye, causing severe pain for several hours.

Mrs. Theodore Patterson, who is an excellent horsewoman, started recently to drive to the postoffice with a pair of colts. They ran away with her, and, colliding with a stump by the roadside, she was hurled to the ground with great violence, receiving severe, and at first thought fatal, injuries. Dr. Rice, who attends her now, thinks she will recover however.

Our little community had hardly recovered from the shock of the accident to Mrs. Patterson when they were startled to hear that Mr. and Mrs. I. D. Mapes had been thrown from their buggy by their horses running away as they were returning from Tecumseh last week. A bolt broke, letting a whiffletree strike one of the horses and frightening both into a run. They ran out of the road, threw out Mr. and Mrs. Mapes, broke loose from the buggy and dashed out for home, where one of them soon arrived with a broken harness, bringing terror to the hearts of those at home who feared the worst. Fortunately Mr. Mapes and wife arrived soon after, under the kind care of Mr. Jos. Keeney and Mr. Butrick, and Dr. Perkins made them as comfortable as their bruised and shaken condition would permit. As no bones are broken it is hoped they will soon be out again.

NO SENATE CLOTURE.

DEBATE CANNOT BE SHUT OFF WITHOUT GENERAL CONSENT.

A Somewhat Sensational Story Regarding the Late Force Bill—Senator Allison as a Presidential Aspirant—The Art of Concealing Ideas With Words.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—[Special.]—It is very evident that the senate will not have anything to do with cloture, at least in this congress. The suggestion has often been made that cloture might be adopted as an expedient for passing the repeal bill, but there is no sign of its being resorted to. Cloture, the reader will remember, is a rule to cut off debate and fix an hour for voting upon a given measure. In the house of representatives they have a way of accomplishing this through report from the committee on rules, and inasmuch as the speaker always controls the committee on rules, it lies with the speaker to say when a measure has been sufficiently discussed and when it is time to take a vote.

In the senate, however, no such rule has ever obtained. There are no means of stopping discussion, and that is why the Sherman law repeal bill has consumed so much time at the northern end of the capitol. This right to discuss and debate as long as any one wishes to take the floor for that purpose is one of the very oldest senatorial traditions. It dates back to the foundation of the government, and it is said by those who are familiar with the history of the senate that it has never been broken. In the olden days the practice was to come to a vote after a reasonable discussion had been had. Then the art of filibustering for the purpose of defeating bills was unknown, or at least was not practiced. Therefore cloture was unnecessary, and would be unnecessary now if it were not for the modern spirit of legislative obstruction which always seeks to make the minority stronger than the majority.

The Shoe on the Other Foot.

Three years ago the Republicans of the senate, then in majority, were greatly tempted to attempt adoption of a cloture rule for the purpose of passing the famous force bill. It was believed then, and so published in the newspapers, that the Republicans were compelled to give up their idea on account of the determined opposition of the minority. The truth is, however, that there never was a majority in the senate in favor of cloture. All the Democrats were against it and quite a number of Republicans. In his speech concerning the late Senator Stanford during the eulogies to his memory the other day, Senator Vest told a story which explained why Senator Stanford had opposed not only cloture, but the force bill itself. This was a somewhat remarkable occasion on which to bring forward an incident of that character, but Senator Vest did it with his usual grace and without any violations of the proprieties.

A Bit of Inside History.

A bit of inside history of that exciting period is pertinent just now while there is talk of a renewed attempt to pass cloture. For a long time the Democrats who were fighting the force bill and cloture were not quite sure of the power of their opponents. They were very much afraid that if a test vote were reached the Republicans would be able to muster a majority in favor of the proposed new rule. The means adopted by the Democratic leaders for defeat of this effort were somewhat sensational. It was arranged that a number of Democratic senators noted for their personal courage and physical prowess were to meet the force bill with force, and by actual violence, if necessary, suppress the reading clerk. The plan was that when the presiding officer of the senate put the motion for adoption of cloture a great hubbub was to be raised on the Democratic side. Senator after senator was to demand recognition by the chair, and if the presiding officer refused to recognize them and ordered the reading clerk to call the roll of the senate for vote upon the motion, then the physical force committee were to rush down to the front of the chamber where the reading clerk had his desk and order him not to call the names. If the reading clerk persisted in obeying the orders of the vice president, as it would be his duty to do, then the physical force committee were to seize him and carry him out of the chamber.

Disgrace Happily Averted.

There is no doubt that if the Republicans had attempted to proceed in this way such a result would have followed. The senate of the United States, which claims to be the most dignified legislative body in the world, would have been disgraced. Had the Democratic physical force committee made such a demonstration, as they had planned, doubtless Republican senators as well as the officers of the senate would have rushed to the defense of the clerk. In the passion and excitement of the moment blows would have been struck, and a scene of violence and disorder unparalleled in the American congress would have ensued. Happily this disgrace was averted, cloture was not adopted, and the force bill never came to a vote.

Now the Democrats are in control of the senate, and a proposition to adopt cloture would come from them with a very poor grace in view of their determined and violent resistance to the same procedure three years ago. They could not now favor cloture without stultification. They have had no intention of proceeding to this extreme, and the probabilities are that for many years to come the ancient senatorial tradition of the right of discussion will stand unbroken.

Speech of a Presidential Aspirant.

Senator Allison of Iowa made one of the notable speeches of the repeal bill debate. Mr. Allison, it is well known here, is a candidate for the presidential nomination of the Republican party in 1896. Many of his friends believe he stands a very good chance to win the prize, though the most general opinion in Washington is that Governor McKinley will be the next leader of the Republican hosts. Senator Allison has had a long and distinguished career in congress, but it has always been said of him that he was afraid to make his real sentiment known on any great public question, and that it was characteristic of him either to be on both sides of a question at the same time or else to be on neither side.

In his speeches he has always displayed great familiarity with the art of using words to conceal opinions. But in this speech on the silver question Mr. Allison left no doubt in his listeners' minds as to where he stood. He announced himself for repeal of the Sherman law, and in view of the fact that he had been one of the representatives of this government at the international silver conference great weight was attached to his declaration that the hope of silver lay in an international agreement for its enlarged use, and that the only way to secure this international agreement was for this government to stand out from under silver, and thus serve notice to the world that if the white metal were to maintain its proper place, not one nation alone, but all the principal nations, must encourage its use.

A MILLION PER WEEK.

AND STILL THEY POUR INTO THE GREAT WHITE CITY.

Where the Visitors Mostly Come From. The Wretched Climate—The Wonders and Delights of Horticulture—Land Enough to Support 800,000,000.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 25.—[Special.]—I am still of opinion that a majority of the visitors so far have come from within a circuit of 200 miles around Chicago. This was my guess at the end of my first fortnight here, and further observation has confirmed it. But there is just now a great change in progress. New England and New York are doing much better, and I occasionally meet an acquaintance from the far south. On the 1st of this month I made an estimate from various sources of information and decided that all New England had not sent as many people here as two congressional districts in central Illinois; that all Indiana and Ohio south of the National road and outside of Cincinnati had sent fewer than two districts in Michigan, and that all the states south of Kentucky and Virginia had not yet learned that there was a World's fair.

But so early as Roman Catholic day, Sept. 2, there was a noticeable change, and on and since New York day that state has been fairly represented. Last week long trains crowded with people began to come in from New England, Kansas and the far southeast, and now the attendance really has a national and gratifying appearance. Nevada and New Mexico had their joint day, but no one would have known it by the increased attendance. But Kansas and Iowa have done nobly. It is not now expected, however, that the highest figures of the past will be excelled before Chicago day, unless the Irish do it, and so a comparison of attendance can be made. The contrast is somewhat curious. On opening day there were but 128,865 present, and at least 100,000 of them wished they had not come, for weather and mud were distressful.

All Kinds of Weather.

And here I may as well say that the proposition to keep the fair open through November strikes me as foolishness, and if there is any crowd here the last half of October it will surprise me. I have lived and traveled in many climates, and this is beyond comparison the worst. On Ohio day, the 14th, the heat was simply unendurable. Twenty persons were prostrated in the grounds, and even in my room I was half smothered. On the afternoon of the 15th heavy overcoats were a necessity to sensitive people, and for three days thereafter a fire was comfortable in the morning. Sometimes it is oppressively warm in the morning and chilly in the afternoon, or vice versa, and just as often one will wake in the morning in a sweat and lie down at night thoroughly chilled.

And still they come. The attendance now exceeds 1,000,000 per week. The first day of noticeably large attendance was June 15—German day—when 165,069 were present. On July 4 there were 283,273, and that remains the best on record. On British day there were 158,861, on Illinois day 243,951, on Machinery day 168,036, on Pennsylvania day 205,460, on the 9th (when so many states and interests joined) 231,522, on Ohio and Kansas day 198,710, and on Texas day—the 16th—199,321. The Irish have insured a crowd on their day, Sept. 30, in the same way the Democrats of Indiana used to insure a victory—by starting the campaign with a big row among themselves. It has long been noted that the harder the Democrats there fight each other in and before the convention the bigger vote they cast, and on the same principle the Irish are justified in their promise to have 50,000 men in line—their uniformed societies—and an attendance of 300,000.

Amid Waving Palms.

The Horticultural building is one in which there is very much to see and very little to report that would be novel, for there are but the same palms, fruits, flowers, cacti, grasses and other growths seen in all such collections, and all that can be said is that there is a larger collection of larger specimens than was ever before exhibited. It is, moreover, a strangely restful place, especially on a warm and sunshiny day. The eye, wearied by long gazing on the crowds and white buildings, is suddenly cooled and charmed by the long vistas and almost mountainous masses of dark green, while the senses are soothed by the murmur of streams flowing down the artificial hills. In it are eight greenhouses, 24 by 100 feet each, and in front of it is a large flower terrace with tanks for nymphaeas and water regias. In the center and under the crystal dome, which is 113 feet high and 187 feet in diameter, is the much praised miniature fountain, 70 feet high, and thickset with such things as giant tree ferns and palms.

Under this is an imitation of the great cave recently explored in the Black Hills of South Dakota, a cave having 52 miles of winding passages. In this cave are many curios and other things for sale at prices warranted to take a common man's breath away. After going through there and pricing the articles, everything outside seems "dog cheap," which is a great relief. For an ordinary quartz crystal—and an active man can gather 10 bushels a day in any one of hundreds of places out west—the price is $1. For a plain stalactite the size of your little finger, the same. For a polished bit of ribbon agate (Utah has a mountain or two of the material), or for cateye, fire eye or any similar and equally plentiful article, the price is from 50 cents up—and a long ways up. A small cross section of a petrified tree, nicely polished, can be had for only $10! In one small district in Colorado are at least 7,000,000 tons of it.

Food and Population.

California's building might properly be treated as an annex to the horticultural department, its display being in the same lines. And looking on these displays, as well as those in the Agricultural building, one is more than ever impressed with the fact that so very large a part of this country is as yet undeveloped. In truth, the white race has but just begun to populate North America.

One-third of the entire area of the United States is a desert—that is, drought, cold, elevation, rock or other causes make it barren, and the most hopeful advocate of a government system of irrigation only claims that one-fourth of it can be reclaimed. But if one-half of our really fertile area were cultivated as Bavaria is, for instance, leaving the other half for roads, forests, cities, pleasure grounds, etc., it would support in great comfort 800,000,000 people. The exhibits here prove conclusively that it could be done. But already the rate of our natural increase shows a great decline, and our people begin to complain of being crowded. It does seem queer that in the cities people should be packed in six and eight story buildings like sardines in the box, when there are still 11 acres of fertile land for each one of us, doesn't it?

FOUGHT WITH PIRATES.

A Band of Post Office Thieves Take to the Lake—They Are Pursued and a Battle with Revolvers Follows—Two Men Wounded—Their Pursuers Reinforced by United States Soldiers, But the Desperadoes Finally Escape.

ST. IGNACE, Sept. 21.—A gang of thieves are operating from a swift sailboat along the shores of Lake Michigan and the Straits of Mackinac. The post offices on Mackinac island and at Charlevoix have suffered. On the night of the Mackinac island robbery a strange looking craft came to a landing and mysteriously disappeared in the morning. Officers at Mackinac hired a tug and after a 48 mile chase overtook the boat and ordered the three men in it to surrender. The thieves at once opened fire. One of the officers was shot in the hand and one of the yachtsmen received a bullet in the breast and face. The fusillade was continued for some time, when the thieves surrendered. Two of them came on board and were secured in the hold in the boat. An attempt was made to get the third, who was hiding under a small deck in the bow of the sail boat. The officers exhausted all their ammunition when the robber came out, and, covering the crew of the tug with two revolvers, demanded the release of his two partners. The officers were at his mercy and the request was complied with. The two prisoners were released and the sail boat cut adrift. The tug returned to Mackinac island for reinforcements and a detachment of soldiers from the fort with several officers on board the steamer North Star left in pursuit of the robbers.

ST. IGNACE, Sept. 24.—The steamer North Star returned to this port Saturday after a five days' cruise in pursuit of the post office robbers. The captain says he failed to find any trace of the thieves. The land hunt is still in progress.

SHUT THEM OUT.

Women of Niles Not Allowed to Vote at a Recent Election.

NILES, Sept. 21.—At the meeting to vote on waterworks bonds women were ruled out by the city attorney, who claimed that only males were entitled to vote at any election. As the refusal is in contradiction to the law granting women suffrage in municipal elections, the courts will have a chance to test the matter. City Attorney Clapp holds that only male citizens are by our constitution made electors, and that by the provision of our charter only freeholders who are electors have the right to vote at a freeholders' meeting. He considers that the law giving women the ballot in municipal elections cannot make them electors, hence under city charters, such as that of Niles, which restricts the right of ballot to electors, only men can vote.

JACKSON, Sept. 24.—Shortly after midnight Saturday David Sullivan, 25 years old, a plumber and a stranger in the city, was found dead in the cellar of Hotel Ruhl with his head crushed. On his person $5 and an A. O. H. assessment card were found.

Therefore he will be governed by the general fish law of 1889, which allows spearing and taking with dip net in most streams.

Robbed a Safe.

SAGINAW, Sept. 22.—The drug store of Banister & Co. was entered at an early hour Thursday morning and $60 taken out of the safe. The thief must have got on to the combination as he opened the safe by simply unlocking it, and came in the front door in the same way.

Two anecdotes show the difference in the treatment of the present financial situation. A woman who had a deposit of $28,000 went to the bank and drew her check for it. The teller began to pay her in silver dollars. She thereupon rented safety vaults in the building, and had her silver deposited there. She drew that amount out of the circulation and helped clog business to that extent. On the other hand a servant girl asked permission to go out as she wanted to go to the bank. Her mistress offered to lend her the money, but she said she heard that the banks were in trouble and she wanted to go and put in her $4. If the public spirit of the servant instead of the rich woman prevailed, the difficulties would be over in 24 hours.

GENTLEMEN—I have tried your P. P. P. for a disease of the skin usually known as skin cancer, of thirty years standing, and found great relief; it purifies the blood and removes all irritation from the seat of the disease and prevents any spreading of the sores. I have taken five or six bottles and feel confident that another course will effect a cure. It has also relieved me from indigestion and stomach troubles.

Yours truly,

A STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

CROOK CITY, S. D., Jan. 29, 1894.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co., Chicago, Ill.:

GENTLEMEN—I have been for some time considering the propriety of writing to you a few lines, relative to my experience with the Owen Electric Belt and Appliance obtained from you about eighteen (18) months ago. Justice to your company, and a desire on my part to make known to others who may be suffering from a similar affliction the relief I obtained from your institution, prompt me to send to you a voluntary statement of my case.

I am a gold miner by occupation, and have been for many years. I crossed the plains to California in 1852, and since then have been in most of the prominent mining camps in the then territories of Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, and at present in Dakota. Leading the rough and exposed life incidental to my occupation, caused me to fall a victim to rheumatism which finally utterly prostrated me in Helena, Mont., in '65." I was under the best medical treatment obtainable in Montana for one year, with but slight improvement, and was finally advised to live among the Indians, and subject myself to their "sweat" treatment. This I did and remained with them about a year, obtaining only temporary relief.

Since that time I have been a chronic sufferer—suffering pain and torture indescribable almost continually. It would be useless to attempt to describe my sufferings. It must be sufficient to state that I sufered from rheumatism in its worst form. I had spent large sums of money, changed climate, visited Hot Springs, lived alternately in high and low altitudes, and employed the best medical advice obtainable, hoping to alleviate, if not cure my complaint. It was all to no purpose, and I had about despaired of ever recovering fully my shattered health, when my attention was called to the Owen Electric Belt by a fellow miner, Mr. J. C. Johnson, of Creek City, who was also suffering from rheumatism, and who claimed to have derived great benefit from a Belt obtained from you. I had tried so many remedies that I was fairly discouraged and skeptical about obtaining relief from any source, but finally determined it was my duty to give your appliance a trial. I will also state right here that, since coming to the town, I have also suffered greatly from kidney disease.

At last I sent for one of your belts, and applied it carefully, according to the printed directions accompanying the same, and can now truthfully say, as I now do to you, that I am no longer troubled with my kidneys, that I am entirely free from rheumatism, and I consider my health as perfect. All this I consider is owing to your valuable and priceless Owen Electric Belt, and I feel I am only performing a duty and paying a deserved tribute to Dr. Owen in sending this unsolicited statement of my case for his information.

Sincerely your friend,
JOHN MULVANY,
Crook City, Lawrence Co., S. D.

A WORD OF WARNING.

BEWARE OF THE MISLEADING CATALOGUES AT THE FAIR.

The Titles and Numbers Deceive the Visitor—Some Gross Errors—A Lesson From Foreign Visitors—Exhibit of a Large Jewelry and Silverware House.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 27.—[Special.]—Every part of this affair is a success so far as I know save one, and that's an infernal deception. This is pretty strong language, I know; but, as they say of the Dahomey village, it takes strong words to describe "strong" things. Of course I refer to the catalogues, official though they be, some of which strike me as the worst combinations of ignorance, awkwardness and misleading [illegible] that a saying a good deal. The Art palace catalogue was based on one series of numbers, then revised and another series added, with a supplementary page here and there, so all the visitor has to do is to find two numbers and decide which is the right one, and it is comparatively a good catalogue.

A Delusion and a Snare.

Visitors not up in art frequently get the wrong title, but that cuts no figure if the picture is good; and in the Holland section especially the difference between Venus and the Virgin, Diana and Daphne is not worth worrying about. They are all Dutch girls anyhow. Besides, I think that ignorance of the title is really a help to beginners—it leaves so much more room for the imagination and the bystander is treated to so many unconsciously humorous remarks. At any rate, it is better to admire and study out the picture before reading about it, and so the art catalogue is just about bad enough to be almost good.

Instead of separate catalogues separately labeled, the title page indicates a catalogue for two or three buildings, but when one opens it he finds it divided into "parts," and that he has the wrong "part." Thus I bought a catalogue labeled "Agriculture and Forestry," wanting only the latter, and found it contained only part of the former. But the beauty of the lot is the book bearing the label, "Official Catalogue—Liberal Arts—Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building." Japan, which has hero the wonders of all her eras, is disposed of in two pages, containing 91 numbers. Of these 15 detail articles for medicine and surgery, 23 education and all the rest buildings, pictures, music and government matters. Concerning all that magnificent display of vases, damascening, carving and other fine work, there is not a line. Presumably it is in some other catalogue, but if so why sell this one as complete?

In the Mexico pages, however, are 377 numbers, and here are specimens of what they indicate: 2. Photograph of the Puebla hospital. 6. Study of the wheats grown in the federal district. 10. Synopsis of cholera morbus. 19. Peruvian bark. 22. Sarsaparilla root. 26. Antirheumatic tincture. 150. Collection of memoirs on chirurgical clinics. 164. Cultivation of sugar cane. 832. Plans of the Vera Cruz penitentiary. "Caramba!" as they say in that country, did they think cholera morbus and cane culture were among the liberal arts? In the New South Wales pages the principal space is given to machines for ventilating sewers, and in the pages for Great Britain one is coolly informed that the things there enumerated may be found in the Anthropological building. When the buyer takes this book back to the red capped "official" boy and complains that he has been swindled, as many indignantly do, the boy points out the notice, "Department L," in small letters on the title back. It's only one small section that is catalogued, but he never mentions this to the intending buyer. Smart boy—that is, if it is smart to deceive the innocent.

Foreign Reverence.

The defects and misleading titles of the official catalogues only increase one's admiration of the clear and beautiful descriptive lists of many private exhibitors, and of these none is better than those of the two Tiffany establishments, whose pavilions are crowded from morning to night with eager gazers. Ordinarily the reporter would not be justified in elaborating on what is but a private business construction, but the Tiffanys long ago passed the stage where such a notice could be of consequence to them. One could no more advertise them than the Rothschilds, for they have the indorsement and patronage of 22 royal and princely personages and rank among the world's great artists and enterprisers. The Tiffany Glass and Decorating company has here a furnished and ornamented room which is simply beyond the power of language to describe and a chapel which ranks high among the wonders of the fair and of the world.

In this chapel I observe a little difference between our folks and foreigners which is at least worth noting, be the moral what it may. Every Italian, Frenchman or Spanish American and almost every European of more northern nations reverently removes his hat and maintains a profound silence, while Americans tramp through and chatter without a sign that the place is any more to them than Machinery hall. It is the same in other places where religion is illustrated. It would be interesting to know what those foreigners think of us.

A Wonderful Collection.

Foreign travelers say the chapel has few if any equals in the world. The entire design is new and yet departs in no important particulars from the best standards. The altar consists of a slab of Carrara marble resting on a frontal of white glass mosaic containing 150,000 pieces, with apocalyptic emblems, the four evangelists, a monogram of the Holy Name embedded in a background of rosary beads and inlays of gold and precious stones bordered with mother of pearl. Back of it are two tables glorious in marble and gold mosaics. The marble tabernacle is enriched by gems. The six canonical candlesticks are of gold filagree work, in which are set precious stones. The altar cross has just enough metal to support the front incrustation of topaz which scintillates the light in all directions. There are also the ciborium, containing 200,000 squares of transparent glass in colors, and the reredos and pedella, equally beautiful, the windows and several other wonders, and over all the finest sanctuary lamp (so the experts say) ever constructed, supporting six angels brilliant with gold, silver and precious stones. But I cannot describe it. No wonder devout foreigners remove their hats and sometimes bow and utter a prayer.

The exhibit of the Tiffany firm of jewelers is more easily understood and described, but it is impossible to get a close view of the greatest wonders unless one goes very early in the morning, so great is the crowd. The great diamond, 23¾ carats heavier than the noted Kohinoor, is set in a turret and by clock work moves around so as to present every flash of its colors to the people on different sides in turn. The famous tiara of 2,000 precious stones is also conspicuous; so also is the great magnolia vase and the clocks—but the clocks of this exposition demand an article to themselves.

GREEK MEETS GREEK

OLD TIME BITTER POLITICAL DEBATES IN HOUSE AND SENATE.

A Roland For Every Oliver—When Senatorial Dignity Goes to the Dogs—A Long Distance Champion Orator—"Bracers" That Do Not Brace.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—[Special.]—Before we get through with the bill to repeal the federal elections laws we are certain to have an old time political debate both in the house and the senate. In the house it is expected the debate over the bill will run several weeks, and during that time all the big oratorical guns of the two parties will be discharged. There is nothing [illegible] debate to stir up the animals in congress. The speakers always take a very wide range, not troubling themselves to confine their remarks to the measure under discussion, but branching out into stump harangues, interrogations, retorts and personal recriminations. Thus we are likely to fight all our political battles over again, and the fur will fly in large quantities and variegated colors. Among the orators on the Republican side who are likely to take part in this discussion are ex-Speaker Reed, who is believed by many people to be the greatest debater in the world; Julius Cæsar Burrows, who is second in command to Mr. Reed on the Republican side; Boutelle of Maine, who is a sort of gatling gun; Dolliver of Iowa, the brilliant young campaigner; Hopkins of Illinois, Payne of New York, Henderson of Iowa, Grosvenor of Ohio and Dalzell of Pennsylvania.

When Greek Meets Greek.

This is a formidable army of speechmakers, but when we look over the list of orators on the other side of the house it is easy to see that there are Democratic foemen worthy of the Republican steel. There is Bourke Cockran, the greatest orator, and next to Mr. Reed perhaps the greatest debater, in the house; Fellows of New York, than whom there are few more eloquent men in the world; Bryan of Nebraska, who has shot to the front both as an orator and as a statesman in meteoric fashion; the two Breckinridges, from Kentucky and Arkansas; General Black of Illinois, who was once commissioner of pensions, and who is known in his part of the country as a great orator; Bynum, the solid man from Indiana, who some years ago won renown by bearding Tom Reed in his den; General Oates, the one armed warrior from Alabama; Springer of Illinois, who would be a stronger debater if his heart were not so soft as to lead him always to bathe the wounds which his irony produces; Rayner of Maryland, who is a rising man; Sibley of Pennsylvania, who made his reputation with one speech during the present session; St. George Tucker of Virginia and Fitch of New York, who are in charge of the bill on the floor.

Night Sessions of the Senate.

The night sessions of the senate always produce some very interesting scenes. Too often these scenes are such as the patriotic American would be glad not to witness. The traditional dignity of the senate is often cut up into small pieces and thrown to the dogs when the hands of the clock indicate the small hours of the morning. Senators who usually are very grave and dignified become infected with the prevailing degeneracy and recklessness of the moment and deport themselves like schoolboys out for a lark. When the senate sits all night, the senate restaurant must keep open for the accommodation of senators and their employees. Notwithstanding the law which prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors in the United States capitol, the senate restaurant—and the house restaurant, too, for that matter—keeps well stocked wine cellars and several large barrels of whisky constantly on hand. The Prohibitionists have several times made efforts to secure enforcement of this law, but the only result of their labors has been the disappearance of the printed wine lists which were formerly used. There are no wine lists now, but there is plenty of wine, beer, whisky, cocktails, juleps and all sorts of fancy drinks.

In the Small Hours of the Morning.

Whenever the senate has night sessions the newspapers are filled with accounts of the bacchanalian scenes on the floor, in the cloakroom and down in the restaurant. Too often these reports are exaggerated and do the senate great injustice, but it does sometimes happen that senators appear in their seats and on the floor, in full view of the public in the galleries, well in the throes of intoxication. More than once the senate has been disgraced by these exhibitions. During the night sessions over the force bill 2¼ years ago, perhaps a dozen or a score of senators were so visibly under the influence of intoxicants that they attracted the attention of every one in the galleries.

One of these senators in particular was likely to disgrace himself, for he persisted in attempting to address the presiding officer and obtain recognition in order to make a speech when he was unable to stand on his feet without bracing himself with his hands. A friend of his in the gallery, perceiving the senator's position and anxious lest he should mar or ruin a fine career by one act of indiscretion, rushed down to the senate entrance, fought his way past the doorkeepers and by the artifice of inviting his senatorial friend out for another drink succeeded in removing him from public view. In 10 minutes this good Samaritan had the senator fast asleep in one of the committee rooms and had saved his reputation.

A Thirty Days' Speech.

Senator Stewart, the silver patriarch from Nevada, has not as yet made his threatened 30 days' speech. Mr. Stewart says he can talk for 30 days at a stretch, and that if necessary he will do it in order to secure delay on the repeal bill. If the senate should decide to sit continuously night and day while Mr. Stewart was making this the greatest effort of his life, the old man would find it somewhat difficult to carry out his programme. Nevertheless he is confident of his ability to do it, and his proposed method is somewhat interesting. He says he has been accustomed all his life to get along with from six to seven hours' sleep per day, and that by sending to the reading clerk extracts from other men's speeches, which will keep the clerk busy three or four hours at a time, he, the long distance champion orator, will be able to retire to a snug corner in his committee room and get all the sleep he needs for a continuance of the battle.

Dumas' Way.

As Alexandre Dumas had dined with a state minister, somebody asked him if he had enjoyed himself. He replied, "If it had not been for me, I would have been bored." Dumas was in the habit of giving 2 francs to a beggar whenever he met him. Once he had only 2 cents, which he gave. "Oh, Mr. Dumas!" exclaimed the beggar reprovingly. "Give them to a beggar," he replied.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Because the alleged steel wheels put out by inexperienced manufacturers have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor.

In this year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor loss is proportionately much less than any wooden wheel, while the loss of the imitation steel ones has frequently been total.

2,288 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,049 sold in '91
60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know Low the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one (@100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO., 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

THE DUNDEE FAIR.

The Dundee Fair struck a good spell of weather this year and was an unqualified success from first to last. Thursday was the "big day" and we made our arrangements to attend. We took the morning train on the Mackinaw and arrived in Dundee about eleven a. m. At that hour the village was literally overrun with teams and people, and upon entering the fair grounds we found the crowd equally as large there. We spent the entire afternoon strolling about the grounds, enjoying the various sights, and the time was [illegible] to good advantage.

The floral hall was well filled with a large variety of exhibits, comprising sewing machines and pianos, hardware, harness, boots and shoes, dairy products and canned fruit, quilts, embroidered goods and ladies' handiwork of various kinds, and a fine assortment of fruits and vegetables.

The departments of sheep, swine and poultry were all well filled and had some very fine exhibits. The show of cattle was also large and contained many fine specimens of blooded stock.

A better collection of horses has rarely been seen in this section of the State. There were some close and exciting races every day, some of which would have done credit to a state fair.

Tecumseh was well represented in this class. Lavern Bidwell and T. R. Kyle were there with all their thoroughbreds. W. A. Cairns and Fred Teachout also had stock there. The latter won two races. A. E. Kniffen of Britton showed two stallions and one gelding, all of which took a blue card. James Wright of Britton showed three Clydesdales, one stallion and two draft horses. Fred Teachout won the two-year-old race and a purse of $75 with Coral Queen. He also won the free-for-all race with John L., which carried a purse of $200. In this race six heats were trotted, the third being a dead heat, in 2:19¼, between John L. and Huron Boy. It is claimed that this was one of the greatest heats ever trotted in the State.

Among the agricultural implements we found Slayton & Avery's hay rack. C. A. Slayton was on hand in person to show its good qualities to the farmers. A steam corn marker was something new and attracted much attention.

Lenardson Bros. of Britton ran a refreshment stand, where they sold soft drinks, eatables, candies and cigars. Theo. Wood had his popcorn popper and Jim Clark his peanut roaster, and they both did a rushing business during the entire four days of the fair.

A. R. Arner of Ridgeway was assisting John Pocklington at the hotel. John was crowded to overflowing but his arrangements were very complete and his guests were all well provided for.

During the early evening, before train time, we called on our old friend, C. H. Gainsley, and found him happy, waiting on a store full of customers. Considering the dull times he is well satisfied with his summer's trade. We also found Dr. J. B. Haines. The Doctor is prospering as usual and the latch string always hangs out at his house for his old Tecumseh acquaintances. We met Frank Rose of Toledo in town, who was taking a day off for a little recreation. Many Tecumseh people were present on the grounds during the afternoon, while the farmers of Ridgeway and Macon turned out in large numbers. A safe estimate of the attendance on Thursday would place the number at five thousand. It was probably the largest crowd that Dundee ever entertained.

The men who devoted their time and money to building up the Dundee Fair are now reaping the merited reward for their enterprise.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the newselection law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

The fourth meeting of the club was held September 14th at the residence of the president and the topic discussed was, "City Government," including the duties of the officers.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to Get Twenty-five Hundred Dollars For Nothing.

Would you like to make twenty-five hundred dollars? If you would, read carefully what follows and you may see a way to do it.

The Press Claims Company devotes much attention to patents. It has handled thousands of applications for inventions, but it would like to handle thousands more. There is plenty of inventive talent at large in this country needing nothing but encouragement to produce good results. That encouragement the Press Claims Company proposes to to give.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

A patent strikes most people as an appalling formidable thing. The idea is that an inventor must be a natural genius, like Edison or Bell; that he must devote years to delving in complicated mechanical problems and that he [illegible] on duplicate experiments before be can get a new device to a patentable degree of perfection. This delusion the company desires to dispel. It desires to get into the head of the public a clear comprehension of the fact that it is not the great, complex, and expensive inventions that bring the best returns to their authors, but the little, simple, cheap ones—the things that seem so absurdly trivial that the average citizen would feel somewhat ashamed of bringing them to the attention of the Patent Office.

Edison says that the profits he has received from the patents on all his marvelous inventions have not been sufficient to pay the cost of his experiments. But the man who conceived the idea of fastening a bit of rubber cord to a child's ball so that it would come back to hand when thrown, made a fortune out of his scheme. The modern sewing machine is a miracle of ingenuity—the product of the toil of hundreds of busy brains through a hundred and fifty years, but the whole brilliant result rests upon the simple device of putting the eye of the needle at the point instead of at the other end.

THE LITTLE THINGS ARE MOST VALUABLE.

Comparatively few people regard themselves as inventors, but almost everybody has been struck, at one time or another, with ideas that seemed calculated to reduce some of the little frictions of life. Usually such ideas are dismissed without further thought.

"Why don't the railway company make its car windows so that they can be slid up and down without breaking the passengers' backs?" exclaims the traveler. "If I were running the road I would make them in such a way."

"What was the man that made the saucepan thinking of?" grumbles the cook. "He never had to work over a stove, or he would have known how it ought to have been fixed."

"Hang such a collar button!" growls the man who is late for breakfast. "If I were in the [illegible] that wouldn't slip out, or break off, or gouge out the back of my neck."

And then the various sufferers forget about their grievances and begin to think of something else. If they would sit down at the next convenient opportunity, put their ideas about car windows, saucepans, and collar buttons into practical shape, and then apply for patents, they might find themselves as independently wealthy as the man who invented the iron umbrella ring, or the one who patented the fifteen puzzle.

A TEMPTING OFFER.

To induce people to keep track of their bright ideas and see what there is in them, the Press Claims Company has resolved to offer a prize.

To the person who submits to it the simplest and most promising invention, from a commercial point of view, the company will give twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, in addition to refunding the fees for securing the patent.

It will also advertise the invention free of charge.

This offer is subject to the following conditions:

Every competitor must obtain a patent for his invention through the company. He must first apply for a preliminary search, the cost of which will be five dollars. Should this search show his invention to be unpatentable, he can withdraw without further expense. Otherwise he will be expected to complete his application and take out a patent in the regular way. The total expense, including Government and Bureau fees, will be seventy dollars. For this, whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a patent that ought to be a valuable property to him. The prize will be awarded by a jury consisting of three reputable patent attorneys of Washington. Intending competitors should fill out the following blank, and forward it with their application:

———, ——, 1893.

"I submit the within described invention in competition for the Twenty-five hundred Dollar Prize offered by the Press Claims Company.

NO BLANKS IN THIS COMPETITION.

This is a competition of rather an unusual nature. It is common to offer prizes for the best story, or picture, or architectural plan, all the competitors risking the loss of their labor and the successful one merely selling his for the amount of the prize. But the Press Claims Company's offer is something entirely different. Each person is asked merely to help himself, and the one who helps himself to the best advantage is to be rewarded for doing it. The prize is only a stimulus to do something that would be well worth doing without it. The architect whose competitive plan for a club house on a certain corner is not accepted has spent his labor on something of very little use to him. But the person who patents a simple and useful device in the Press Claims Company's competition, need not worry if he fail to secure the prize. He has a substantial result to show for his work—one that will command its value in the market at any time.

The plain man who uses any article in his daily work ought to know better how to improve it than the mechanical expert who studies it only from the theoretical point of view. Get rid of the idea that an improvement can be too simple to be worth patenting. The simpler the better. The person who best succeeds in combining simplicity and popularity will get the Press Claims Company's twenty-five hundred dollars.

The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about three hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

Address the Press Claims Company, John Wedderburn, managing attorney, 618 F street, N, W., Washington, D. C.

BASE BALL AT BLISSFIELD.

The Association team went down to Blissfield Saturday and played ball with the Champions of Lenawee (self-constituted), with a result of 12 to ? in favor of Tecumseh. Whether Blissfield wished no report of the game to get back to Tecumseh or not is unknown, nevertheless a specimen of the genus "culled gemmen" was stationed at the entrance gate to sit firmly down on press representatives in his most effectual and open-mouthed manner.

The game opened with Tecumseh at bat. Letcher struck out, Lee went out at first, Whelan struck a single and stole second, Tray took first on four balls, and Dixon followed Lee's example by being put out at first, base.

For Blissfield, Carpenter made a single, stole second, ran to third on a [illegible] was caught between the plate and third base and went out. Leticour got his base on balls, stole second and scored on an error. Robinson was put out at first, Leary got four balls but was caught stealing second.

The next inning was a walk-away for Tecumseh, six runs being made, every man in the team scoring but Whelan, Dixon and Heidenrich. Blissfield failed to score in the second, third and fourth innings and Tecumseh in the third, fourth and fifth. Croak (Blissfield) made a single in the fifth and scored on an error. In the sixth Tecumseh made six more tallies and from that time on neither side made a score.

Summary: Struck out by Walsh 4, by Regan 5, by King 11. Hits on Walsh 8, on Regan 0, on King 6. Blissfield had 2 runs, 6 base hits and 9 errors. Tecumseh had 12 runs, 6 base hits, one 2-base hit, one 3-base hit and 4 errors.

AT TECUMSEH

Yesterday Blissfield came up and played the return game. For a time it looked as though the game would be confined to few scores and fine playing. Neither side scored till the third, when E. Tray got first on four balls, stole second and third and scored on Dixon's hit to Regan, who let it pass him. In the fourth Smith scored for Blissfield and King and Heidenrich for Tecumseh. Blissfield scored four in the sixth, five in the seventh. Tecumseh got two in the fifth, one in the sixth and four in the ninth, making the score tie 10 and 10.

Umpire Keyser called for the tenth inning to break the tie, and Blissfield refused to play. It not being dark enough to interfere with the game, there was no excuse for such refusal, and after waiting the required length of time, the only alternate was taken, and the game declared in favor of the Association by a score of 9 to 0. Summary: Struck out by Regan 8; by King 8, hits on Regan 9, on King 10; Blissfield scored 10 runs, made 7 base hits, two 2-base hits one 3-base hit, 1 sacrifice hit and 7 errors. Tecumseh scored 10 runs, made 9 base hits, 2 sacrifice hits and 8 errors.

Tecumseh High School vs. Palmyra.

The High School club came in contact with the Palmyra team on our grounds last Friday afternoon. Neither side scored in the first. In the second Drake made a run for Palmyra, and in the third each team scored two. Palmyra made five runs in the fourth, on errors, but failed to score in the fifth and sixth. Burlingame scored for the High School, in the sixth. Palmyra brought in two tallies in the seventh, and our boys concluding that they were having more than their share began playing, and scored six runs in the seventh, and one in the eighth, at the end of which, the game was called, on account of darkness. Summary: Struck out by Wilson, 7; by Day, 6. Hits on Wilson, 13; on Day, 4. Palmyra had 10 runs, 4 base hits, 1 sacrifice hit and 6 errors. High School had 11 runs, 10 base hits, 3 two-base hits nad 10 errors.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

The Adrian Press says: "The fifth grade school room, at Tecumseh, is so full of children that the windows are kept closed as a precaution against any of them spilling out." This statement is'nt very far off, but there is a Morse-l in charge of that room who knows how to take care of 'em. It would do the Press editor's heart good to see her make 'em stand round.

We call attention to the local in the Britton items in regard to Britton playing ball with the Association team. The fact is, that Tecumseh never has had the honor (?) of playing ball with the above mentioned team. Some one must be afflicted with "wheels." Tecumseh has a game with Clinton on Saturday the 30th, but if Britton will put up enough coin of the realm to make it an object, they can be accommodated, but the idea of having already been rolled in the dirt by Britton is a little ahead of the oldest inhabitant's fish story.

The Ladies' Home Journal.

One of the many striking features of the October Journal is a set of original waltzes by Eduard Strauss, the famous waltz composer. The Study of the Voice, by Christine Nilsson, is a valuable contribution, accompanied by a sketch of her home life and personality. Josiah Allen's Wife is at her best in a delightful little story and Mr. Howells' serial story is brought to a happy conclusion. There is a page of biographical sketches with portraits of four young literary women. The other departments of the magazine are well filled. Altogether this number of the magazine is particularly attractive. Published by the Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia for Ten cents per number and One Dollar per year.

I also tried mercurial and potash remedies, with unsuccessful results, but which brought on an attack of mercurial rheumatism that made my life one of agony. After suffering four years I gave up all remedies and commenced using S. S. S. After taking several bottles, I was entirely cured and able to resume work. WITHOUT THE Non-pull-out BOW (RING)

It is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand; the chain in the other and, gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

This idea stopped that little game:

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE LIVER PILLS

THE LOAD OF ATLAS.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND TRYING TO CARRY A HEAVY BURDEN.

The Many Sided, Astute and Energetic Dan Lamont—A Political Football—A Constitutional Amendment Upon the Subject of the Tariff.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—[Special.]—President Cleveland has not had much assistance from his cabinet members during his struggle to secure the passage of the repeal bill through the senate. Secretary Carlisle, oddly enough, is the only member of the cabinet, with the exception of Secretary Herbert, who has ever served in congress, and unfortunately Mr. Carlisle has for some years trained with the men who are now opposed to repeal. Indeed the secretary's own speeches in favor of silver are frequently quoted against him on the floor. Mr. Carlisle has many friends among senators on both sides of the chamber and has been able to move many an obstruction in the road. Secretary Gresham has not exerted himself in this case. His time and energies have been fully consumed by the state department affairs. He has at the present time many important questions to deal with and has no opportunity to do any work on the finances.

Postmaster General Bissell, Secretary Smith, Secretary Morton and Attorney General Olney are new men in Washington. They have little acquaintance among senators, and have not as yet been able to form those intimate friendships which would place much influence in their hands. Besides, they, too, find their own departments quite as much as they can take good care of. Secretary Herbert has had long experience in congress and has an excellent standing among the leading public men of the day. But he has little time and perhaps still less inclination to mix himself up in this financial combat.

Lamont, the Great Diplomat.

Secretary Lamont knows every public man in Washington. He is besides diplomatic, astute and energetic, and in his quiet way has been able to render the president some service in this emergency. A singular feature of the situation is that, while Secretary Lamont is supposed to be nearer the president than any other member of the cabinet and to possess very fully his chief's confidence, he is still on intimate terms with Senator Gorman, who, as is now pretty well known, is the leader of the Democratic party in congress and not wholly in accord with the president. Nearly every day Senator Gorman calls upon Secretary Lamont at the latter's hotel. There are few men in the world who have the peculiar qualities of mind and character which would enable them to carry on this dual sort of relationship, but Mr. Lamont is a remarkable man. He is a diplomat if there ever was one, and he is able to bear confidential relations with leaders of opposing forces with only display of bad faith with either.

The president has been hard pressed in this fight for a repeal, but he has not had the support and co-operation of an influential cabinet. The situation presents so many difficulties that even as strong a man as Mr. Cleveland must at times feel the necessity of having lieutenants on whom to lean.

Why the President Is Worried.

The importance of this struggle to the president as well as to the country cannot easily be overestimated. It is so far the signal feature of his second administration. Not only has he set his heart upon accomplishing this object, but he has employed methods which naturally subject him to fierce criticism and denunciation. It is charged that he has used the power of his office in a manner in which no president has dared to use it since the days of Andrew Jackson, with the possible exception of that brief period in which Andrew Johnson sought to hold the country up by the tail.

Mr. Cleveland is severely criticised for attempting to be not only the executive head of the government, but the legislative as well. A dozen times a day one may hear in the capitol the expression that, while Mr. Cleveland is a big man, he is not big enough, and this country never yet produced a man big enough, to take upon his shoulders the responsibility of managing the White House, the executive departments, the house of representatives and the senate all at the same time. Still, nothing succeeds like success, and the best answer that Mr. Cleveland could possibly make to these criticisms would be by having his own way and passing the repeal bill without change or amendment. Defeat under these circumstances, after the employment of these vigorous and almost unexampled methods, would be doubly humiliating.

Demands of Business Men.

People who have attended the hearings on the tariff held by the ways and means committee have been much impressed by the constant reiteration of the desire on the part of manufacturers and business men for information as to when the new tariff law is to go into effect. In the nature of things they cannot hope to learn much about what the changes in the schedules are to be until after the Democratic end of the committee shall have agreed upon them; but if they could soon know at what date these changes, whatever they are, will go into effect, that would be an enormous advantage to them. This demand for some basis of operations and plans comes as well from those people who want the tariffs reduced as from those who want them let alone or increased. The suggestion has been made that congress pass a joint resolution fixing a date for the new law to go into operation. While it is apparent that congress could not absolutely bind itself in this manner, and would even after passing such a joint resolution be free to change the date, it would in honor adhere to the date if it could, and by so doing immeasurably help the business interests of the country. Chairman Wilson tells your correspondent that he and the members of his committee fully appreciate the situation and will very soon consider what, if anything, they can do in this direction.

Tired of Tariff Tinkering.

There is one thing that even the most careless observer is now able to perceive among the public men of Washington. It is a rapidly growing impatience of a political system which makes the tariff laws, which are so intimately bound up with business operations and the prosperity of the people, a mere political football. Men who think a high tariff is bad and men who think a low tariff is bad agree that something should be done to stop the frequent changes of rates, with consequent disturbance of values and business conditions. One finds some of the ablest and shrewdest public men at the capital willing to predict that before many years have passed public opinion will compel the adoption of a constitutional amendment which will forbid tariff changes oftener than once in 10 years or after each federal census.

MARVELS OF MINING.

WONDERS WRESTED FROM THE BOSOM OF THE EARTH.

Improvements In This Great Industry as Shown at the Chicago Fair—Ada Rehan In Silver and a Pillar of Salt Great Attractions For the People.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 22.—[Special.]—I have been all over the Mining building three times, and still I hesitate to attempt a description—first, because I am in this case unusually anxious to do full justice, and, secondly, because in mining matters all errors are serious. Even an omission may prove a serious error, for there are a thousand little variations in the chemistry of minerals, and quite as many little technicalities in the terms to describe them, and as a very minute variation in the constituents of an ore may and often does make all the difference between profit and loss, so a similar variation in terms may turn important truth into nonsense. There are many grades in other kinds of reporting.

A Mine Connoisseur.

If I knew as little of mining as I do (or recently did) of art, I should tackle the subject with the same confidence—the sublime self confidence, as it were, shown by the monkey of the fable who wound the watch with a corkscrew. But as I was for many years examiner of mines and writer thereon in Utah and Colorado, the case is different. In the coal mines of Indiana, Ohio and Nova Scotia, I have often had occasion to notice how completely nature reverses herself, and that familiarity with that kind of mining rather disqualifies one for understanding a silver mine. Coal and iron are in beds, so to speak. They tend toward the horizontal. Silver and gold lodes are in fissures (not quite always) and tend to the perpendicular. Hence, the longer a true fissure vein is worked, the more difficult its working becomes, by reason of heat and water, hoisting the greater distance and the accumulation of such waste matter as is left in the vein.

And here is where the mining engineer gets in his science, and it is in this line that this building is indeed full of marvels. There is the great model section shown by the Calumet and Hecla Mining companies of Michigan, and though their output is copper the system of timbering is the same as for silver. A large space upon the wall represents the mine—the opposite wall is supposed to be removed and the spectator to have his position in its place. Then he has before him the long timbered shaft or incline, running to the greatest depth worked, the chamber which has been worked out and timbered up, and all the slopes, drifts and winzes for opening new ore ground and taking out the ore by "back stopping." Here, too, are the great fans, which drive a regular little tornado of cold fresh air to the bottom of the deepest shaft, and the great suction funnels, which in turn draw up the foul air.

In Subterranean Depths.

All these are running at lightning speed, as everything does in a mining country, and if you think such tremendous drafts unnecessary consider that at the 1,500 feet level in the great Comstock lode the thermometer in the side drifts stood the year round at 152 degrees, and the men could work only by half hour shifts, resting between times in the main passages, where connection had been established, the air rushing down one shaft and up another and sweeping all the intermediate sections. Here, too, are the monster pumps which pour out those great streams one may see flowing down the mountainside, and here are the monster hoisting engines and all the latest appliances for crushing, sorting, roasting, concentrating, separating, chlorinating, washing, desulphurizing, melting and finally refining, for even the rich and comparatively clean sulphuret ores of Colorado must go through 10 elaborate processes after leaving the mine, and every process demands the highest kind of engineering skill. Don't tell me that silver will cease to be a precious metal; it takes too much labor and skill to get it.

Ada Rehan's Statue.

In view of all these things, it almost aggravates an old miner to see so few people in this building and to note that the crowds are about two or three particular sights. One is the diamond washing and polishing. I have not yet been able to get near enough to watch the process, for it draws the people in mass. By the way, another thing I have not been able to see is the scenic theater in the Electricity building, for there are hundreds waiting there whenever it is open. Montana's silver statue of Ada Rehan of course draws a crowd, and so do the wonderful copper exhibits. It is indeed a pleasure to look at the great masses, 6,000 and 8,000 pounds each, of this metal almost pure in its native state from the mines of Michigan. In the cases, too, are hundreds of specimens of the "flowered" ore, its surface shining in brilliant green. Gold is the only metal, I believe, which "flowers" or gives a stain of its own color. Copper stain is green, iron stain is red, lead stain is silvery gray, and the sulphurets, generally in combination with other minerals, flower out on the surface in all the gorgeous disorder of the so called "peacock ores."

Another crowd is generally found about the petrified woods, of which Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona have sent some truly wonderful specimens. Imagine a cross section sawed out of a freshly fallen oak and then suddenly turned to the hardest agate—all the veins and annual rings, and even the minute variations just under the bark, fixed in the eternal statuary of nature. Some of these slabs are two feet across, and while the vim is left in the "natural wood," so to speak, the face is polished to a mirror-like smoothness. The so called moss agates, water agates and ribbon agates attract much less attention, as, though pretty, they are not specially curious.

Other Mineral Curiosities.

The strange forms which silver assumes are more interesting. When there is more of the pure metal in a mass of ore than the quartz or other matrix can hold in chemical or mechanical union, the excess forms upon the face of the ore mass—sometimes in fine spun threads of silver hair, sometimes in wire silver and again in ruby silver, horn silver or silver glance. In rare instances the excess coats the ore mass in filmy folds like what butchers call "leaf lard." All these interest the people—as curiosities merely.

Under the Kentucky pavilion is a reproduction of one chamber of the Mammoth cave. In the Washington building is the mammoth block of coal—41,000 pounds. The famous A. E. Foote collection of 150 tons of rare minerals, which was shown at the Centennial and at Paris, is also here. The Greeks have sent many things of interest as antiquities. The statue of Liberty in salt, 5 feet 6 inches high, was cut from a single block taken from a depth of 250 feet. All these and a few more interest the people for a few minutes each; but, alas! they care nothing for all the science embodied in these wonderful machines and mining models.

CLEVER WORK.

The Mineral Range Train Robbers in Custody.

The $70,000 They Stole Will Be Produced as Evidence Against Them—How They Were Run to Cover by the Detectives.

MR. PINKERTON TELLS THE STORY.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 23.—Five men have been placed in jail by Detective William A. Pinkerton charged with being the robbers of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic train last Friday at Hancock, Mich. The detective has ceased his work and the $70,000 taken from the American Express company has been recovered and will be produced in court as evidence. Three of the five men arrested have confessed and a fourth is willing to do so, but his evidence is not considered necessary to the detectives. The men arrested are: Ed Hogan, of Marquette, Mich., an express messenger who has recently been living the life of a sport, and who was the originator of the conspiracy; Dominick Hogan, his brother, who was the express messenger on the train that was robbed, and who had custody of the $70,000 that was taken; Jack King, the famous champion of the United States at the Cornish style of wrestling; Jack Butler, of Marquette, Mich., an all-around crook, who has done his term in the state's prison; George La Liberte, an ex-railroad stoker.

As soon as the robbery was reported the affair was placed in the hands of Detective Pinkerton, who went to the scene of the robbery at once with the officials of the road and express company. Mr. Pinkerton's first work was to discover if any strangers had been seen in the neighborhood. It was found out that King and Butler had been much in conference just before the robbery. Then a woman was found who told of a conference between Hogan, the express messenger, and King and Butler. Next some work was done in regard to the imprints of the hoofs of a horse found near the scene of the robbery. People were seen who had seen a blanketed horse in the vicinity and the blanket was identified as belonging to a horse the hoofs of which fitted the imprints found near the scene of the daring robbery.

Then La Liberte's connection with the affair came out. He had left Houghton the night of the robbery, taking with him a trunk. It was found that La Liberte had carried off the stolen money with him, and it had been taken by Ed Hogan. The trunk, when found, had in it the disguises used by the men when they robbed the train.

"We found out," said William A. Pinkerton, "that the job had been put up by Hogan, the messenger's brother, who had himself been a messenger in the same service. He knew all about the monthly shipment of the Calumet & Hecla money. He got Butler, King and La Liberte into the plot. The last named boarded the engine and the other two broke into the car and secured the money. It was intended to ditch the engine in order to save time, but this was prevented by the passage of ore trains. We have the evidence all in hand, and much of our information was gathered by the confessions of the men."

HOUGHTON, Sept. 24.—The examination of prisoners suspected of the robbery of the Mineral Range train a week ago, which was set for Friday afternoon, has been again postponed. No definite date for the examination was fixed. This would indicate that the Pinkerton men have not got the case against the prisoners they claim.

GAVE BIG MORTGAGES.

Two Michigan Concerns Devise Means to Meet Their Indebtedness.

GRAND RAPIDS, Sept. 24.—The Widdicombe Furniture company and the Widdicombe Mantel company have given mortgages to the Michigan Trust company, trustee, as the basis of an issue of bonds, the former company not to exceed $30,000 and the latter $10,000, the bonds to bear 7 per cent. interest and payable in installments extending over five years. The furniture company's assets are estimated at $700,000 and the mantel company's at $350,000, and the two concerns are the largest in the world, employing over 1,000 hands. Of bonds issued, over $200,000 furniture company and about $80,000 mantel company were taken, chiefly by the local banks and capitalists. The money will be used in paying off all floating indebtedness.

BOTH WERE DROWNED.

Two Men Lose Their Lives in the Bay Near Marquette.

MARQUETTE, Sept. 25.—Henry Hoffenbecker and John McMahon, engineer and fireman of one of the South Shore switch engines in the yards here, were drowned in the bay near No. 1 ore dock Sunday. The men had been shooting ducks from the shore and got into a small skiff to get some of the birds that had dropped several hundred feet from the shore. When well out from land the boat began to fill with water. They jumped out and were drowned.

To Form a State Police Union.

DETROIT, Sept. 25.—Superintendent of Police Starkweather, vice president of the National Union of the Chiefs of Police, has issued a call to the heads of police in all cities and villages in the state for a convention, to be held next month, for the purpose of organizing a state union. He has received many favorable replies and the convention will be a success. The state union will work in conjunction with the national organization.

Cliff Iron Mines Closed.

ISHPEMING, Sept. 24.—The pumps were stopped Saturday night at the Karnum mine and the shafts will be allowed to fill with water. This means the mine will be idle for a year or more. It is owned by the Cleveland Cliff Iron Mining company and employs 450 men when running. It has nearly 200,000 tons of unsold and at present unsalable ore in stock.

Everybody is asking everybody just now, "Will you attend the World's Fair?" They ought also to ask if you know the quality of Chicago water and are aware that it is "bad medecine" for strangers. Doctors' services are expensive in Chicago. In traveling, especially if visiting Chicago, it will be wise to have a supply of Brant's Extract of Blackberry with you. It may ward off cholera. It excels all other remedies for quick relief and cure of Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera, Flux, Colic, Summer Complaint and all Bowel Troubles of either children or adults. Only 25 cents of J. J. Orr, Tecumseh. 2

MUCH BLOOD SHED.

A Double Tragedy Is Enacted Near Petoskey.

Abe Wilsey Shoots and Fatally Wounds His Wife, Who Refused to Live with Him, and Is Killed by Henry Sik.

STORY OF THE AWFUL AFFAIR.

PETOSKEY, Sept. 25.—Saturday afternoon Abe Wilsey shot and fatally wounded his wife and was in turn shot and instantly killed by a Swede named Henry Sik. The tragedy occurred at Kegomic, where the Wilseys kept a boarding house. The couple had never lived happily together since their marriage seven years ago. They separated three weeks ago, Wilsey leaving his wife to run the house. He returned Saturday afternoon and called his wife into a room and tried to persuade her to live with him again. She refused positively, and Wilsey drew a revolver. As she fled, shrieking, from the room, he fired four shots, all taking effect. One grazed the head, one entered the arm at the elbow, a third took effect in the side and the last passed through the right leg. Henry Sik, a boarder, rushed into the room and claims that Wilsey pointed his revolver at him. Wilsey had previously threatened Sik's life. Sik dodged behind the door, and, reaching his arm around, fired four shots. When help arrived Wilsey lay on his face in a pool of blood. One ball had gone clear through the body and another struck him squarely in the forehead. The woman said Wilsey had shot himself, but Sik frankly admitted that he fired the fatal shots. He has not as yet been arrested. The woman is still alive, but cannot live.

AN IMMENSE SUPPLY.

Michigan's Crop of Peaches and Grapes Almost Too Big to Move.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 25.—Michigan's peach and grape harvest is on with a vengeance now, and as a result the various transportation companies that are engaged in bringing the fruit to Chicago and other markets are swamped. By day and night the baskets and packages of peaches and grapes are brought into Chicago and the prospect is that these fruits will be considerably cheaper. It is the opinion of G. S. Whitslar, of the Graham & Morton line, that the grape crop in Michigan is too enormous to move this year. "They will simply have to let the grapes rot or make wine of them," said he. "All the transportation lines by rail and lake are handling fruit to their greatest capacity now and they seem to have no effect upon the supply."

At the O'Connor dock seven boats arrived from Saugatuck, Holland, Benton Harbor and other fruit centers with 50,000 baskets of peaches and 20,000 baskets of grapes. The steamer Chicora came in with 18,000 baskets of peaches aboard and 10,000 baskets of luscious grapes. The City of Chicago arrived with 28,000 packages of peaches and 15,000 baskets of grapes. There is every reason to believe that shortly, in the event of a frost, the steamers will have to increase their carrying capacity to move the supply on the docks across the lakes.

A Fatal Dose.

MENOMINEE, Sept. 22.—Henry E. Hall, American Express agent, died suddenly Thursday morning from an overdose of chloral. He was a man about 45 years old and had been in the employ of the company for twenty-two years. He leaves a widow and three daughters.

AT THE BIG FAIR.

Sons and Daughters of Michigan Gather in Great Numbers.

About 45,000 of Them Assist in the Celebration of the Days Set Aside for the Wolverine State—An Outline of the Festivities.

GLORY FOR THE STATE.

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 14.—Michigan's men and women were united in force Wednesday at their state building to hear the governor and two ex-governors and other fellow citizens. American flags were hung all over the building in huge folds, fan-shaped streamers and festoons.

It is estimated that about 45,000 residents of Michigan were on the grounds. Just before the morning exercises opened a number of Michigan girls marched up to the Administration building and rang the new liberty bell in honor of their state's anniversary of admission to the union.

The speech-making at the state building brought out Gov. Rich, President Palmer, Gen. Alger, ex-Gov. Begole, ex-Senator Ferry, Director General Davis, the superintendent of Michigan agricultural exhibits, J. J. Woodman, National Commissioner Barbour, Frederick Douglass, Col. McReynolds and Mrs. Laura G. Haviland, 84 years of age.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon a vocal and instrumental concert was given on the north side of the building. In the evening the Michigan building was brilliantly illuminated on the occasion of a ball given in honor of Gov. and Mrs. Rich, the state officials at the fair and the military men who accompanied the governor on his visit to the white city.

Michigan's second day at the fair saw just as many visitors as did the first. The state building was packed to the very top and the verandas were filled all day. Gov. Rich and his officers made a tour of the Michigan exhibits during the afternoon and made a formal visit to Gov. McKinley in the Ohio state building.

At 2 o'clock Mrs. Minnie Nichols, soprano; Mrs. J. G. Steketee, and Misses Bessie Walker and Myrtie Watson, pianists, gave a delightful concert in the Michigan building. The pianos used were also a product of Michigan. The Chase Bros. company, of Muskegon, sent their fine grands over for the occasion.

The ball was devised and carried out by the Misses Burt, of East Saginaw, Miss Pond, lady commissioner, and Miss Flynn, of Detroit, and was inaugurated at 8 o'clock. The building never looked more brilliant and the dancers did ample justice to the occasion.

With this closed Michigan's celebration at the fair. In all probability several formal affairs of a social nature will be given in the state building before the close of the exposition. In the meantime Michigan always keeps open house, and its building is open to the public and highly illuminated until 11 o'clock every night.

A MISSING BANKER CAUGHT.

O. P. Bills, of Tecumseh, Brought Back from New Mexico for Trial.

ADRIAN, Sept. 15.—About a year ago the bank of O. P. Bills, of Tecumseh, shut its doors owing depositors many thousands of dollars. Bills professed to be able soon to square accounts with depositors. However, matters dragged along and finally Bills absented himself and for months his whereabouts were not known to the general public. Deputy Sheriff Pease has arrived in this city from Eddie, N. M., having the defaulting banker under arrest charged with embezzlement. The warrant was sworn out by James E. Gibbs, a Cambridge township supervisor. The complaint alleges Bills' neglect to account for $1,550 in bonds deposited in the bank to the credit of the Adams estate by Gibbs as administrator. The prisoner gave a $2,000 bond to appear for examination.

Charged with Counterfeiting.

BATTLE CREEK, Sept. 17.—Deputy Sheriff King, of this city, arrested Henry Count in Berry county Saturday as an accomplice of Gregg, the counterfeiter. They had passed several counterfeit silver dollars here. Gregg has been held to the United States court for trial. Count is a rich farmer in Berry county and stands high in the community. A large quantity of base coins have been found on Count's place which are of very poor workmanship.

Eight Years for Assault.

STE. IGNACE, Sept. 17.—William Badgley, the Fort Mackinac soldier, has been found guilty of criminal assault upon Lillian Saulter, a Mackinac island waitress, who committed suicide rather than face disgrace. He was sentenced to eight years at hard labor.

Information concerning the school can be had by addressing M. P. McGregor, 20 McGraw building, Detroit.

Here an opportunity is afforded the student to combine the work of the school with that of the office, so that the practical and the scientific elements of his education may progress together. To this end all exercises of the college are held in the evening and students are also encouraged in securing work during the day in suitable law offices in the city. They are also encouraged in attending the various courts, so far as this does not interfere with their other duties.

Chicago's Sights.

Every visitor to Chicago should see Lincoln Park, which is probably the most attractive resort of the kind in the country. It is situated immediately on the lake shore, is easy of access, and the home of the beautiful in nature and art. Among its special attractions are its lakes and lily ponds; its conservatory of rare plants; its electric fountains; its monuments to the memory of Lincoln, Grant, Schiller; and others; its artesian wells; its floral designs, walks and drives; and last, but not least, its collection of wild animals, which is said to be second to few in the world. The Park is free to visitors at all times, and its landscapes, hills and unequaled views of Lake Michigan make it restful to the eye while its amplitude of seats gives assurance of physical comfort at the same time. The authorities in charge will be found ready to answer questions and direct strangers to the various objects of interest.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Some thirteen of our citizens left for the World's Fair city Tuesday morning.

A boy arrived at Dr. Hardy's last week Wednesday, Sept. 27th. Mother and child doing well.

Grandma Lenardson feels highly elated over the arrival of an 8 1-2 pound girl, the property of her son, E. W.

A. E. Kniffen was fully as successful at the Adrian fair as at Dundee, taking 1st and 2d prizes on his blooded stallions.

Elder Wright's Cleveland bay stallion, Glencoe, took first prize at Adrian, his others also walking off with considerable prize money.

Mrs. E. F. Sink has removed her millinery shop across the Wabash railroad into the corner brick store, formerly owned by Jos. Daykin.

L. A. Babcock took possession of the postoffice last Monday. He will leave it temporarily in Lenardson Bros. store until he can arrange for its permanent location.

Wheels, did they say? Wheels? Well, now, I guess they got the wheels on the wrong buggy. I will explain to that man in Tecumseh, whose affection surely must be "wheels," that the B. C. in the article in this column last week referred to the Battle Creek club and not, as we think he must have supposed, to the Britton club. But now he must not accept this as an acknowledgement of our club's inferiority. Oh, no! They still retain their inherited stick-to-itiveness in the face of one of your Association nine's remark that Britton "yawp" had yet to be closed, and they (Tecumseh) would be O. K. of course; B sfield in the meantime to be si-le-ed, and we know how well the quietus was put on them.

THE SAD ACCIDENT TO THE MISSING LINK.

The missing Link, one day last week,
Went up to town some pleasure to seek.
He borrowed a horse of Dr. P.,
For he says that no man can drive better than he.
He put a kicking strap on behind,
And laughed to think of the pleasure he'd find.
He left our village at a clipping pace,—
The people thought he was running a race.
In half an hour the Link came back,
Leading the horse minus kicking strap,—
Minus the harness, bridle and all,
And the Link did indeed look small.
He walks no more with a stuck-up look,
For he's got a nice little bill to foot.
The buggy he borrowed was kicked to shreds,
And Mr. Link suffered about the legs.
But he bought some lotion from the Chinaman
And Dr. Tammany says he'll do all he can
To fix him up so he'll walk quite well;
But only patience and time can tell.
The Wandering Minstrel regrets to think
Of the badly bruised parts of Mr. Link;
But his feelings are shocked indeed to know
That Link as a horseman should make such a show. W. M.

PENTECOST POINTERS

The Lenawee Co. Agricultural Horse Trot, enjoyed five days of pleasant weather, something unusual in their experience.

And now two more poultry houses have been raided. It looks as if farmers would have to forego pot-pie and fricassee, or sleep with their chickens.

G. W. Fuller, will soon take charge of Uncle Sam's mail at this place. He knows all about the ropes however, having been postmaster before. Success to him.

"If the Lenawee Co. Fair does not bring showers, we might just as well give up looking for rain this fall," said one old farmer, but the rain came all the same, and the farmer rejoices.

Smith German, retired last Wednesday, expecting to attend the fair Thursday and Friday, but was taken very ill in the night, and has been on the sick list since, although feeling a little better at this present writing.

R. Fisk, of Adrian, has moved on the W. Perkins' place, and Emmerson Whicher, of Wolf Creek, has taken possession of Dr. W. Perkins' place, as tenant. Both came well recommended as good citizens and will be welcomed among us.

The many friends of postmaster Buck, will be sorry to learn that his turn has come to be decapitated, but such is the way of the world, or rather of the politicians, in the world: as comical Miles O'Riley would say, "Bad 'cess to 'em entirely."

In view of the frequency of such horrible affairs as the Brainard-Kuney tragedy, at Adrian, would it not be well for girls to wear chain armor, hereafter, when they entertain gentlemen friends, and a policeman armed with a Winchester, might be employed to accompany them in their walks and rides. Really it looks as if "modern chivalry" and "emotional insanity" threaten to drive Hymen out of the world.

The sad news of the death of Miss Emma Slow, was received here Sunday, and her many friends in this vicinity will be pained to hear of her untimely decease. She was a lovely girl, both in person and character, and had barely blossomed into young womanhood when, she was stricken with that dreadful disease, consumption. Her parents had recently removed to Tecumseh, and now in their crushing bereavement, they have the tender sympathy of every heart, here in their former home, where Emma attended school when a child.

The air is full of rumors of an immense strike about to take place, among one of the large Labor Unions, in the world, and beside which, any previous strike pales into insignificance, in point of numbers at least. They cite a long list of grievances, drouth, frost, leaky quarters, and other unfavorable sanitary conditions, and announce, after a great deal of wordy debate, their unalterable determination to rise in their might and —— emigrate. At least we gathered as much from a convention of about five thousand, which assembled in the old elm tree behind the barn, Sunday afternoon.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Time will not permit us to give a sketch of our visit to the great Exposition in this week's issue.

Those who have gone to visit the world's fair since the last issue are J. O. Shepard and Emma Miller.

Rev. E. Yager is moving his household effects to Milan, where he has been stationed for the coming year.

You can't afford to lose the greatest event of your life and the wonder of the nineteenth century by not visiting the World's fair.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Presentation of a Badge to the "Drummer Boy of the Rappahannock."

One of the most pleasant and interesting features of the grand campfire held Wednesday night of the National encampment week at Indianapolis was the presentation to Comrade Robert Henry Hendershot, the drummer boy of the Rappahannock, with a beautiful badge. Following a drum solo by comrade Hendershot, which he performed on the original drum Horace Greeley presented him after the battle of Fredericksburgh in 1862, ex-President Benjamin Harrison, who presided at the campfire, accompanied by Colonel Smith, stepped forward, and in the presence of 5,000 veterans, clasping the drummer boy warmly by the hand, in glowing tribute to his bravery in his boyhood days, presented him with one of the handsomest Grand Army badges ever worn by a veteran. The badge is of solid gold, regulation Grand Army size and insignia.

Each point of the star bears a diamond, the eagle's eye a ruby, pendent between the star and eagle a small cross emblematic of the Woman's Relief corps bearing four diamonds, below the cross a miniature drum and sticks. The reverse of the pendent G. A. R. star bears the following: "Robert H. Hendershot, drummer boy of the Rappahannock from G. A. R. and W. R. C. comrades, Indianapolis, September, 1893. Honor to whom honor is due." Comrade Hendershot passed through Indianapolis in 1861 on his way to the front with his regiment, the Ninth Michigan volunteer infantry. On this visit he was royally greeted by many of the ladies, who in those stirring days of the war, contributed so much to the comfort of the boys in blue on their way to the front. They recognized in the bronzed and stalwart veteran the little drummer boy who had won their admiration and who had carried with him their best wishes and prayers for his safe return. With the badge was a large number of letters from comrades of both the Grand Army and Woman's Relief corps, from all parts of the United States, bearing commendations couched in patriotic and loving terms, words that made the soldier's heart beat even quicker than the taps upon the drum now made by hands skilled by years of service. The W. R. C. and comrades also presented Comrade Hendershot with a beautiful regulation, inlaid snare drum, heavily mounted and trimmed with silver, bearing upon a silver G. A. R. badge the inscription of presentation. J. C. Hendershot, son of the drummer boy, was presented with a beautiful fife banded in gold. The son as a fifer wins applause wherever he appears.

The presentation speech of the fife and drum was made by that noble woman, Kate B. Sherwood, the founder of the W. R. C., who ever dares to stand up for right and justice. Her remarks brought tears to the eyes of the loyal hearts who have known Robert Hendershot from the time he crossed the Rappahannock in 1862. Even the nurse who took care of the drummer boy while sick at City Point, Va., in 1863, was present. Maj. Hendershot acted as a spy for Gen. Grant at City Point, Va., 1861. He went into Richmond twice and into Petersburg three times before the close of the war. General Grant recommended him to Lincoln for West Point for these acts of bravery.—Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean.

Authentic History of the Fair.

The September number of the World's Columbian Exposition Illustrated is by far the finest issue that has yet come from the press of this truly first-class publication. The size has been increased from twenty-four to thirty-two pages, and the illustrations many and fine. There are six full-page photographs of the interiors of the principal buildings, showing a panoramic view of the exhibits, besides the frontispiece, Sir Henry Trueman Wood, Secretary Royal British Commission. The other illustrations include those of the leading exhibits in the different departments of the Fair, including the Treasury building in Souvenir Coins in Rotunda of the Administration building, the animal exhibit in Kansas state building, Illinois Fruit Exhibit, Queen Victoria and Princess Christian, Awards Committee and Committee of Arrangements for Banquet given W. I. Buchanan, Chief Department Agriculture. There is one page devoted exclusively to photographs of state buildings, and other illustrations of an unusually high order. Among the leading articles are "The World's Fair at Night." "Permanent Buildings at the Fair," "Extend the Exposition to 1894" and many others on the various features of the Exposition. As an Authentic History of the World's Fair this work has no equal. Presenting only the best features of the Fair, it gives its readers that which it desires most, and which will be a valuable souvenir after the Exposition is past and a part of history. Bound into volumes it makes the only authentic and reliable history of the great Exposition. Back numbers and the first Two Bound Volumes are on hand and can be furnished at once by addressing the publisher. Send 25 cents for a sample number. It will continue after the Fair as Campbell's Columbian Journal. Address J. B. CAMPBELL, 159 and 161 Adams St., Chicago.

The second edition of The Cosmopolitan for September brought the total edition up to 211,000 copies, without doubt the largest edition of any magazine in the world for this month. It remained for the Cosmopolitan to have the World's Fair treated in a single number by twelve different writers. As the exposition of 1893 must remain one of the leading events in the history of the United states, the most distinguished men were asked to prepare this magazine volume, which is destined to become valuable as one of the most perfect descriptions of the World's Fair. Among the number of those who contribute are our only ex-president, Walter Besant, the most distinguished of the English literary men who visited the exposition, and hosts of others. Besides the usual fiction, including a story by Mark Twain, entitled, "Is he Living or Is He Dead," and the regular departments, The Cosmopolitan contains nearly one hundred illustrations devoted to the World's Fair, including eleven full pages. It is pronounced one of the most remarkable of the publications yet issued regarding the Fair. It is a completely illustrated guide or souvenir, as one prefers to call it, by the most famous writers of the day, put before the reader at the price of 12 1-2 cents, and more than the equal of the books of the Fair which sell for seventy-five cents and one dollar.

THE MAJORITY RULE.

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON'S TIMID-

Senator Gorman's Masterful Patience and Voorhees' Hot Headed Denunciations. Interesting Sketches From the Senate Gallery—The Compromise Question.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—Many inquiries have been received here as to why the majority of the senate has not long before this settled the repeal fight by forcing a vote. The people who make these inquiries cannot have read the newspapers very closely, because it has been made very plain in Washington dispatches for the last two or three weeks that under the rules of the senate a majority has no power to force a vote upon an unwilling minority. The situation which has prevailed in the senate for five or six weeks has brought one result in its train, and this is that sooner or later the traditional practice of the senate will have to be radically changed and absolute power given the majority to rule. As has already been pointed out in these dispatches, the majority could obtain control under the rules as they now stand were the presiding officer willing to be the instrument of the majority for this purpose. There was much talk last week that Vice President Stevenson would be willing to play this role, and it is true that he did have such a proposition under consideration. But the project was abandoned after a few days' consultation among the leaders. Vice President Stevenson did indeed listen to the propositions that were made to him in this direction by the repeal managers, but he ultimately reached the conclusion that any attempt on his part to coerce the minority would seal his own political fate.

Many Presidential Aspirations.

It is well known in Washington that the vice president hopes to go up higher; not, indeed, through the death of President Cleveland, but by being nominated and elected as his successor in 1896. The vice president is quietly and carefully playing all his cards with a view to the coming presidential campaign. His policy is essentially one of caution, almost of negation. Mr. Stevenson was never a positive man and has always believed rather in the efficacy of neutrality. Some of his most intimate friends think he is making a great mistake in this matter. They think he had an opportunity which, had it been improved by a display of courage and determination, would have made him the foremost man of the Democratic party, excepting, of course, Mr. Cleveland. One of these friends of the vice president, an Ohio congressman, said to me recently:

"I urged General Stevenson to take the bull by the horns in the senate and to make himself a power. I pointed out to him that an opportunity had come to him which few men in this country ever see. I showed him that not only in the parliamentary methods of the senate, but in the fact that the people, unconcerned party and of views on particular questions, were demanding a leader like the vice president. I pointed out to him the political advantage to himself and to his party that would follow the defeat of Senator Hill. But Stevenson is constitutionally timid, he has no courage, he has no soul. He is content to be the presiding officer of the senate, to preside over its deliberations, to count the yeas and nays, to announce the result of the ballot, to do the things that any clerk could do, and to play the part of the dignified gentleman. Mr. Stevenson is one of my warmest friends, and nothing in the world would give me greater pleasure than to see him succeed to the presidency."

Senator Hill Only Wanted a Chance.

Several other presidential aspirants have had a chance to walk this road to glory. One of them is Senator Hill. Mr. Hill has been accordingly urged and importuned all through the repeal fight. Though not very much in love with Mr. Cleveland and far from being a supporter of the administration, Senator Hill has done everything in his power to urge the repeal bill through. Many times has he said to his intimate friends that he would give all the money he had in the world if he might be vice president of the United States and presiding officer of the senate for the space of a few weeks. The opportunity of which General Stevenson does not care to avail himself, although urged to do so, Senator Hill would embrace with great eagerness. "If I had been in Stevenson's place," Senator Hill says, "this bill would have been off the senate weeks ago, and there would never more be Gold bugs to the glory of the majority to rule in this body."

Senator Gorman's Masterfulness.

Men are made of various materials. Vice President Stevenson is neutral. Senator Hill is audacious and positive. Senator Gorman is quietly masterful. For several weeks Senator Gorman has not appeared on the surface except when he had his fun with Mr. Wolcott. So far as the ordinary observer could see, he was doing nothing. He seemed to be on good terms with both sides, but it is not in Mr. Gorman's nature to be either neutral or idle. He has been at work, and successfully, too, as the champion of compromise, having for his argument the threatened disruption of the Democratic party in case one side or the other of this battle should lose its all. While Mr. Gorman does not show his hand until the time comes, he is always alert, active and full of purpose.

That moment is now here, and Mr. Gorman is at the front. Passage of a bill that will be on the whole satisfactory to the country, and at the same time make some concession to the silver producing states and avert the disaster which hangs over them, would be a triumph for the leadership of Mr. Gorman in the senate. Besides, Gorman thinks it will strengthen the Democratic party in the west. Senator Hill would emerge with great eclat. "If I had been in Stevenson's place," Senator Hill says, "this bill would have been off the senate weeks ago, and there would never more be Gold bugs to the glory of the majority to rule in this body."

"Between the ages of five and fifteen, I was troubled with a kind of salt-rheum, or eruption, chiefly confined to the legs, and especially to the bend of the knee above the calf. Here, running sores formed which would scab over, but would break immediately on moving the leg. My mother tried everything she could think of, but all was without avail. Although a child, I read in the papers about the beneficial effects of Ayer's Pills, and persuaded my mother to let me try them. With no great faith in the result, she procured

WHERE THEY STAND.

SENATOR DUBOIS SAYS THE SILVER MEN WILL COMPROMISE.

President Cleveland on the Hawaiian Matter—Congressman Bryan on the Tariff and an Income Tax—Possible Defeat For the Administration.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 2.—[Special.]—If this silver question is ever disposed of, we shall have, in addition to the elections bill and the tariff, another interesting topic of discussion in the Hawaiian matter. Just as soon as the silver bill is out of the way President Cleveland will send to congress a message concerning Hawaii, accompanied by Commissioner Blount's report of his investigations at Honolulu. Though vigorous efforts are made at the White House and the state department to conceal information concerning the president's policy with reference to Hawaii, your correspondent is able to announce in general terms what that policy is. The president will recommend neither annexation nor a protectorate for Hawaii. He will maintain that it is the duty of the United States simply to restore law and order in the Sandwich Islands. The report of Commissioner Blount will be cited to show that our late minister at Honolulu and the officers of our naval ships stationed there were rather too officious in their efforts to dethrone the queen and to establish the present provisional government.

The president will declare that, our agents having thus connived to promote a change of government, it is our duty to permit the people of Hawaii to resume control of their own affairs and to protect life and property while they are doing it. This, in the opinion of the president, is as far as our duty goes. While he is anxious to guarantee home rule and peace and order in Hawaii, the president is not willing to leave matters in such shape that any other nation may step in and take possession of the islands. His recommendations to congress, therefore, will be in the direction already described, and he will further ask congress to adopt a policy that will in effect serve notice upon the nations of the earth that the United States would be unwilling to see Hawaii fall into the possession of a foreign power.

Silver Men Willing to Compromise.

But when will the silver question be disposed of? Week after week goes by, and no vote is reached. Apparently we are as far from a solution of the problem now as we were a week ago, when we started in on a series of speeches which have filled a large volume of Congressional Records with words and figures. Among the young men who have come to the front on the silver side of this contest is Senator Dubois of Idaho. He has won quite a reputation during the present session of congress as Mr. Teller's most active and useful lieutenant. When asked by your correspondent to define the position of the silver men, Mr. Dubois replied:

"We stand just where we have always stood. We know the bill cannot pass the senate as it is drawn at present, and all our efforts have been put forth to show the other side that this is true. Just as soon as they become convinced of their inability to secure a vote we anticipate they will come to us with offers of a compromise. In my opinion, the day when this will occur is now near at hand. We are willing to accept any fair and reasonable compromise measure, anything that will give some promise of a future policy that does not involve total abandonment of silver. We are willing to accept the Faulkner proposition, the Squire proposition or anything that will not put an immediate stop to the purchase of silver. We would even be willing to accept the present bill if its operation were postponed two or three years, so that our people may have notice of the suspension of silver purchases and be able to govern themselves accordingly. Suddenly to close our mines means ruin throughout the west. No notice was ever given us of the intention of the Democratic party to do anything of this sort. It is different with the tariff question, because every manufacturer interested in the tariff had his notice in the platform adopted by the Democrats at Chicago and in the result of the election of what he might expect in the way of tariff changes. All we want is fair treatment, and we propose to stand here until we get it. The present indications are we shall not have to remain here very long."

Mr. Bryan Talks For Income Tax.

Another young man who has attained much prominence of late is Congressman Bryan of Nebraska. Though now serving only his second term, he is in the front rank on the Democratic side of the house and occupies a position which many men struggle for through eight or ten years of service. He is a member of the ways and means committee and one of the leaders therein. He said to your correspondent today: "I have not a doubt we shall make a tariff bill that will be a measure of genuine reform. We are going to cut all along the line, especially on raw materials and on those articles in which monopoly exists. In order to raise more revenue I believe we shall adopt an income tax, placing a graduated tariff upon all incomes exceeding $10,000 per year. While I am not sure we have a majority for this in the committee, there is undoubtedly a majority for it in the house, and I believe it will be put in the bill. The poor men of the country favor an income tax, and we are here to legislate in behalf of the masses of the people."

Compromise Probable This Week.

In another week the bill to repeal the federal elections laws will be passed in the house and go over to the senate. If the silver bill is not sooner disposed of in that body, an effort will be made to take up the elections bill as the regular order of business, thus sidetracking the silver bill. Before this time comes, a compromise is probable. The leaders of the repeal side are very reluctant to have the battle continue until the elections bill makes its appearance, for many Democratic senators who are in favor of repeal would not like to vote against taking up the bill to repeal the federal election laws, which is very popular among their constituents. Some of the southern senators who nominally favor the repeal bill do so with very little earnestness and would be glad of an opportunity to sidetrack that troublesome measure by bringing forward a bill in which their constituents are so much more interested, and on which they are united. If the repeal leaders allow such a motion to be made, it will probably carry, and that will mean defeat for the administration and for the repeal cause. The hope of the repeal managers is in securing action during the present week, and how they are to secure action without making concessions to the other side is more than any one can tell.

Among Greek rustics the bride and groom walk around between two consecutive circles composed of the young men and women of their acquaintance, who heartily kick and cuff them as they pass.

A BOOM AT THE FAIR.

THE 200,000 MARK IN DAILY ADMISSIONS OCCASIONALLY PASSED.

Indiana, the Irish and the Knights of Honor Have Grand Days—Dahomey Gets Bigger Rations of Liquor and Howls. The Anthropological Building.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 2.—[Special.]—And still we linger. There was a time we didn't think we should, but now we know that we have a real boom. The alleged melancholy days have come, but they are the liveliest of the year, for the great storm the Iowans brought with them was followed by clear, cool and bracing weather, and though every third day may be considered bad the people continue to crowd all the buildings. The total of paid admissions for last week was 1,133,432, and this week's will evidently beat it, for Indiana astonished herself and Chicago, while the Irish took the city, and there was a great multitude in the grounds, probably equal to or exceeding that of Illinois day. On Sportsmen's day the paid admissions were 199,174; on State Commissioners' day they fell to 170,559, but on Knights of Honor day they bounded up to 213,452. Indiana has since done so well, and Ireland did so very much better that once more Chicago is betting on a total of 20,000,000 paid admissions for the entire fair.

It was thought that Irish enthusiasm had far outrun probability when they promised 40,000 men in line and 300,000 paid admissions for the day, but when Lord Mayor Shanks of Dublin, with the lady mayoress and many other dignitaries, including two members of parliament, arrived, and when it was made certain that all the orators promised were here, we accepted the draft on our faith and figured the total admissions with unusual interest. The lord mayor and party will remain here nearly a week longer, and many special affairs in their honor are arranged.

Nobility an Everyday Affair.

Professor Thomas Moore, director of the Jesuit choir of Chicago, has been for some time drilling his little army of singers, made up of volunteers from many musical societies, for that occasion, and the fireworks were of course Irish from start to finish. There were brilliant portraits of Grattan, O'Connell, Emmet, Wolfe Tone, Marshals Nugent of Austria, MacMahon of France and O'Donnell of Spain, Charles Carroll, Barry Sullivan, Shields, Meagher, Sheridan, John Boyle O'Reilly and Colonel Mulligan. The French also are making quite a display of late, as 35 artisans were sent by the government and 30 by the municipality of Paris to study the industrial and artistic features of the fair and city. They are regular laborers, too, not mere agitators, and look as little like the alleged erraties of Paris as one can imagine. Last of all, Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria is said to be on the grounds, but if he is very few Americans know him. We have had so many princes and such gorgeous ones that we don't mind a few dukes.

Chicago continues to add to her many attractions for the 9th, and half a million souvenir tickets have been printed. Florida insists that she, too, will be in it on that day, though few people will know it. But in one respect she holds over Chicago—she has a real live tribe of her original aborigines, and at their head Ass-se-he-ho-lar, or Black Drink, their chief, commonly called Osceola and grandson of the great Osceola, who was truly a noble Indian, though Captain Mayne Reid has almost reduced him to a mere romantic myth. In the procession will be representations of De Soto and Ponce de Leon on their march, the mayor of Jacksonville will orate, and Professor King will make a balloon ascension. In the aborigine line Chicago seems to have found no live Iroquois, or even a Winnebago, in reach, but the Iroquois club has agreed to do its best on a warwhoop. Of the great Miami Nation, which but 100 years ago occupied all the region from Chicago river to Miami river in Ohio, the latest report is that only 40 families remain (that is, of pure Indians), and it is likely that their presence here would be mournful rather than inspiring.

Dahomey May Dance.

I cannot learn that any great preparations are made for other special days in October, of which the most important are Mexico's, on the 4th; Rhode Island's, 5th; Polish, 7th; North Dakota's 10th; Connecticut's, 11th; Minnesota's, 13th, and Ancient Order of United Workmen, 28th. All this time the far-foreign folks of the plaisance continue to amuse us with their squabbles and reconciliations and threats to leave and break up the show. The Dahomey folks shut their gate and packed their goods to leave, but Manager Pene was firmly told that he could not remove anything till after 10 p. m. Oct. 30. Director General Davis then granted a special permit for the negroes to dance and howl on the wall to attract attention, and each of the 85 is to have a medal at the close. They have forced their manager to pay higher wages, and among the additions to their daily rations are 12 gallons of claret, 5 cases of Chicago beer and 2½ gallons of whisky. They use it all and as much more as they can smuggle in, and if I may judge from their bowling it operates on them much the same as on our own natives.

A Few Oologies.

And speaking of natives, I observe that the Palace of Anthropology is recently attracting much more attention. Its location in the southeast corner of the grounds probably caused many to miss it who had but a few days to stay, but it is now crowded. The great Siberian mammoth, "restored according to Waterhouse Hawkins," is oddly enough the subject of most criticism and skepticism, and at least half the visitors regard it as a "fake." Oddly enough, I say, for it so happens that that famous mammoth is almost the only one of which there can be no possible doubt, for it was taken from the frozen earth of the Lena delta entire in bone, flesh, skin and hair, as it had lived. The "cold storage system" of that region was so great a success that the skeleton of the mammoth was eaten by the dogs when discovered. The plan of the building is not comprehensive enough, for it contains the exhibits in anthropology, zoology, ethnology and paleontology. Next to the mammoth and mastodons in popular interest are the skeleton of the whale—and it is the real bones—and the imitations or reproductions of the brontosaurus, megalosaurus robustus and other enormous monsters of that dreadful time when, apparently, the infinite allowed nature to run at random and all creation was in a chronic state of delirium tremens.

A Baker's Dozen.

There have been various origins assigned to the phrase, "a baker's dozen," signifying 13, but there is only one generally regarded as authentic. Formerly in London, when a small retail dealer bought bread of the baker, for every dozen loaves purchased he was given an extra loaf as his profit, from which circumstance comes "a baker's dozen."

procure the alleged steel wheel, as pursued by inexperienced manufacturers have gone down in ordinary winds, a fearful fact is proven that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor. In the past year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor towers proportionately much less than any wooden wheel, while the loss of the imitation steel ones has frequently been total.

2,288 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,049 sold in '91
60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes. These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country." Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 3 weeks to be filled, but now we have vast increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co., in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made of different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one, ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO., 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

Sec. 8. The carriages to be used on said road shall be drawn or propelled by electricity, and no such carriage shall be drawn or propelled thereon at a higher rate of speed than eight miles an hour, and in operating such road it shall be the duty of the conductors and drivers to give timely notice of the approach of such carriages to pedestrians and the drivers of other vehicles by the ringing of bells.

Sec. 9. The grantees of this franchise or their assigns in the operation of such road shall employ none but careful, prudent, sober and reliable men to take charge of the cars while on the road, and it shall be the duty of all such employees to keep vigilant watch for all trains, carriages and persons on foot, and especially children, either upon the track or mowing towards it, and at the first appearance of danger to such teams, carriages, footmen, children or other obstruction, the cars shall be stopped in the shortest time and space possible.

Sec. 10. During the construction of such road no unnecessary hindrance or obstruction to ordinary travel shall be permitted and in the operation of such road no carriage shall be allowed to stand upon any cross-walk for any purpose whatever, or to stand or remain in one position upon any street for more than five minutes at any one time, except when said carriage shall be unavoidably detained without the fault or negligence of said grantee, his heirs or assigns, or of their servants or employees.

Sec. 11. The said common council shall not grant to or confer upon any corporation privileges which will impair or destroy the rights or privileges herein granted to said grantee, provided, however, that whenever the said council may deem it expedient that a line of railroad should be constructed upon any street or streets upon which the said grantee has not constructed any line of railway, they shall declare the same by resolution, and order and direct that said grantee shall construct the same.

It shall be the duty of the recorder of said village to serve a copy of said resolution upon the said grantee, his heirs or assigns, or in their absence from said village, upon any employee of said grantee or his assigns. If the said grantee, his heirs or assigns shall fail to file with the recorder his acceptance in writing within thirty days, or fail to build or put in operation such line or lines of railway as he shall be so required to build within one year from the time of such notice, then said council may grant the right of way to another company.

Sec. 12. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to deprive the said common council of the right to authorize other railway companies to cross said tracks, provided the same is without trouble or expense to said grantees or their assigns.

Sec. 13. The fares for the carrying of passengers shall be fixed by said grantee or his assigns, but shall not exceed the sum of five cents within the corporation, ten cents to any point between Tecumseh and Clinton, and twenty cents to any point between Tecumseh and Adrian. The power house of said road to be located in Tecumseh village.

Sec. 14. If at any time the said grantee or his assigns shall fail to operate such road each successive day after such road shall be completed and put in operation, unless by unavoidable accident, this franchise shall cease and be null and void.

Sec. 15. The cars used on said road shall be of good material and workmanship and suitable for the purpose of carrying passengers and baggage, and the conductor or motor man in charge of such cars shall call the names of all principal streets and stations and shall exhibit suitable red and green lights when such cars are being run at night.

Sec. 16. Whenever in the opinion of said common council it shall be deemed necessary to move any of the poles or wires of such road, or reset any of the poles or wires of such road, or reset any of the poles belonging to the same, the same shall be done by the said grantee or his assigns without expense to said village, after serving such notice as provided in Sec. 4 of this ordinance.

Sec. 17. It is hereby reserved to said common council the right to make such further rules, orders and regulations as may from time to time be deemed necessary for the protection of the interest, safety, welfare or accommodation of the public in relation to said railway, which shall not impair the rights and privileges herein before granted.

Sec. 18. The said Nesmith, his heirs or assigns shall file with the recorder of said village within ninety days after the passage of this ordinance his acceptance in writing and the above mentioned bond of the terms and restrictions and regulations thereof that work shall be commenced within 60 days after filing notice of acceptance, and in default thereof it shall be understood and held that he declines to accept the same and shall forever and be at an end in the same manner and with the same effect as if this ordinance had never been passed.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to Get Twenty-five Hundred Dollars For Nothing.

Would you like to make twenty-five hundred dollars? If you would, read carefully what follows and you may see a way to do it.

The Press Claims Company devotes much attention to patents. It has handled thousands of applications for inventions, but it would like to handle thousands more. There is plenty of inventive talent at large in this country needing nothing but encouragement to produce good results. That encouragement the Press Claims Company proposes to to give.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

A patent strikes most people as an appalling formidable thing. The idea is that an inventor must be a natural genius, like Edison or Bell; that he must devote years to delving in complicated mechanical problems and that he must spend a fortune on duplicate experiments before he can get a new device to a patentable degree of perfection. This delusion the company desires to dispel. It desires to get into the head of the public a clear comprehension of the fact that it is not the great, complex, and expensive inventions that bring the best returns to their authors, but the little, simple, cheap ones—the things that seem so absurdly trivial that the average citizen would feel somewhat ashamed of bringing them to the attention of the Patent Office.

Edison says that the profits he has received from the patents on all his marvelous inventions have not been sufficient to pay the cost of his experiments. But the man who conceived the idea of fastening a bit of rubber cord to a child's ball so that it would come back to hand when thrown, made a fortune out of his scheme. The modern sewing machine is a miracle of ingenuity—the product of the toil of hundreds of busy brains through a hundred and fifty years, but the whole brillant result rests upon the simple device of putting the eye of the needle at the point instead of at the other end.

THE LITTLE THINGS ARE MOST VALUABLE.

Comparatively few people regard themselves as inventors, but almost everybody has been struck, at one time or another, with ideas that seemed calculated to reduce some of the little frictions of life. Usually such ideas are dismissed without further thought.

"Why don't the railway company make its car windows so that they can be slid up and down without breaking the passengers' backs?" exclaims the traveler. "If I were running the road I would make them in such a way."

"What was the man that made the saucepan thinking of?" grumbles the cook. "He never had to work over a stove, or he would have known how it ought to have been fixed."

"Hang such a collar button!" growls the man who is late for breakfast. "If I were in the business I'd make buttons that wouldn't slip out, or break off, or gouge out the back of my neck."

And then the various sufferers forget about their grievances and begin to think of something else. If they would sit down at the next convenient opportunity, put their ideas about car windows, saucepans, and collar buttons into practical shape, and then apply for patents, they might find themselves as independently wealthy as the man who invented the iron umbrella ring, or the one who patented the fifteen puzzle.

A TEMPTING OFFER.

To induce people to keep track of their bright ideas and see what there is in them, the Press Claims Company has resolved to offer a prize.

To the person who submits to it the simplest and most promising invention, from a commercial point of view, the company will give twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, in addition to refunding the fees for securing the patent.

It will also advertise the invention free of charge.

This offer is subject to the following conditions:

Every competitor must obtain a patent for his invention through the company. He must first apply for a preliminary search, the cost of which will be five dollars. Should this search show his invention to be unpatentable, he can withdraw without further expense. Otherwise he will be expected to complete his application and take out a patent in the regular way. The total expense including Government and Bureau fees, will be seventy dollars. For this, whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a patent that ought to be a valuable property to him. The prize will be awarded by a jury consisting of three reputable patent attorneys of Washington. Intending competitors should fill out the following blank, and forward it with their application:

——————, 1893.

"I submit the within described invention in competition for the Twenty-five hundred Dollar Prize offered by the Press Claims Company.

NO BLANKS IN THIS COMPETITION.

This is a competition of rather an unusual nature. It is common to offer prizes for the best story, or picture, or architectural plan, all the competitors risking the loss of their labor and the successful one merely selling his for the amount of the prize. But the Press Claims Company's offer is something entirely different. Each person is asked merely to help himself, and the one who helps himself to the best advantage is to be rewarded for doing it. The prize is only a stimulus to do something that would be well worth doing without it. The architect whose competitive plan for a club house on a certain corner is not accepted has spent his labor on something of very little use to him. But the person who patents a simple and useful device in the Press Claims Company's competition, need not worry if he fail to secure the prize. He has a substantial result to show for his work—one that will command its value in the market at any time.

The plain man who uses any article in his daily work ought to know better how to improve it than the mechanical expert who studies it only from the theoretical point of view. Get rid of the idea that an improvement can be too simple to be worth patenting. The simpler the better. The person who best succeeds in combining simplicity and popularity will get the Press Claims Company's twenty-five hundred dollars.

The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about three hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

Address the Press Claims Company, John Wedderburn, managing attorney, 618 F street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

GONE TO REST.

Died Saturday last, Sept. 30th, Miss Emma Snow. She resided in Tecumseh but a short time, having moved here recently. She was born Jan. 8, 1874, at Franklin, where most of her girlhood was spent. From Franklin the family moved to Cambridge where they resided until they took up their residence in this village, the last of August. She had been of a robust nature until taken some two years ago with the measles, from which she never fully recovered. The measles leaving her with the more dreaded disease of consumption. Miss Snow had not the opportunity of becoming very well acquainted in Tecumseh, yet all who met her recognized her superior worth. Her nature was somewhat quiet yet true, and made her a friend to everybody. In the home she was especially dear, as her nature endowed her with qualities which made her the source of consolation and happiness to all in the family.

While death brings sadness, yet her death was a joy, in that she held a bright and earnest faith in Christ as her Savior. To die thus is gain. The family wish to thank all the old friends from Cambridge and the new ones from Tecumseh who did so much to lighten their burdens and assist in the moments of need.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our sincere thanks to our kind friends, both in this vicinity and in Onsted, for their great kindness, in our recent bereavement. Also to Rev. Brown and the choir.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

A TAX UPON INCOMES.

ITS ADVOCATES LIKELY TO SOON CARRY THEIR POINT.

The Idea Meets With Great Favor In the West and South—A Possible Way to Break the Deadlock—Secretary Carlisle Interviewed.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—An income tax is one of the probabilities of the new tariff bill. This intelligence will doubtless be somewhat surprising to most readers. Nevertheless there is a strong probability that the ways and means committee of the house will decide to put some sort of an income tax feature in the bill which they are now preparing. The committee has not as yet decided officially to do so, but it is believed a majority of the Democratic members of the committee are in favor of this policy, and that in the end it will be adopted. If the committee for any reason decides against the introduction of an income tax feature, it is believed the matter will be brought forward in the house after the bill shall have been reported, and it is claimed there is an overwhelming majority there in favor of the tax.

Members who favor an income tax say the demand for such legislation has been constantly growing during the last few years, especially in the west and south, and that such an enactment would meet with great favor everywhere, except in the large cities and New England. The prevailing idea appears to be that the poor men of the country are paying more than their share of the burden of taxation for support of the federal government, the operation of the present customs and internal tax being such that a poor man and his family pay nearly as much tax as the rich man and his family. This, at any rate, is the argument of those who favor revival of income taxation. Whether or not their argument is sound, the fact remains that they have many champions in the Democratic party in both branches of congress and are likely to carry their point at an early day. Considered from a purely political point of view, these Democrats who favor an imposition of a tax upon incomes say nothing could be done by the party in power that would have greater tendency to win it the support of the agricultural and working classes throughout the greater part of the country, and for this reason alone, if for no higher one, the departure should be taken.

Republican Senators Restless.

Senators who are friendly to silver claim that most of the pressure of public opinion in favor of repeal comes from the newspapers and not from the people. In illustration of this a certain New England senator—a Republican, of course—who has been earnestly in favor of repeal, says he has so far received but two letters from his state concerning the Sherman law. Both of these letters are from prominent business men, who say it is not the silver currency they are afraid of, but the tariff bill, and being Republicans, they quietly informed this Republican senator that he is making a donkey of himself and his Republican colleagues are making donkeys of themselves by helping the Democratic party and the Democratic administration to carry through their policy. The senator says it is a matter of great surprise to him that he has received no letters from his constituents in favor of repeal of the Sherman law. The only letters he has received—these two—advise him to make a trade with the silver representatives, and in consideration of defeating the silver bill secure also defeat of the tariff bill.

Is the Senate a Failure?

As matters now stand, it is evident we are at a standstill so far as legislation in the senate is concerned. Unless the rules be changed or the vice president shows a willingness to take the bull by the horns, we shall have a complete blockade of business. A minority is able to prevent action on the silver bill, and the Republicans have already served notice that if the minority is able to rule in this body they will take advantage of the situation to defeat the election repeal bill by the same means. They say it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. The Democrats cannot complain, because they adopted the same tactics to defeat the force bill. There is no reason why the rule of the minority could not be extended so as to defeat also the tariff bill which is now being prepared by the ways and means committee of the house. In fact, this sort of minority domination could be so extended as to defeat all legislation against which five or six or a dozen or a score of senators had objection.

A Possible Way Out of the Trouble.

One way out of the difficulty has been much discussed during the last few days. It is that the vice president, who is also presiding officer of the senate, may conclude that the rules give him some discretion and latitude, and that at the proper time, when the debate has gone on so long that further discussion seems mere obstruction, he may exercise the right to put the bill to a vote. The rules of the senate are not very explicit on many points connected with the putting of motions and order of business, and it would not be a difficult matter for a presiding officer possessed of firmness and courage to seize upon a favorable stage of the proceedings for bringing the matter directly to an issue.

For instance, if Senator Voorhees were to move that a vote be taken upon the repeal bill, and upon that question demand the yeas and nays, the vice president could at once, if he chose, put the motion and order the tally clerk to begin the call of the roll. The roll call once begun by the clerk, there would be no power in the senate to stop him except the order of the vice president. And this action of the vice president being within the rules, he could with confidence as to the outcome persist in his course.

Of course the silver senators would violently object and vociferously demand recognition from the chair for the purpose of making speeches, but if the vice president, having ordered a roll call, were to decline to permit interruption of the proceedings, the silver senators would have no redress. Without violation of confidence, your correspondent is able to say that while such action as this on the part of the vice president is not probable, yet it is not impossible. At any rate, it is evident we are going to have some stirring times in the senate chamber very soon.

What Secretary Carlisle Says.

There is no disposition on the part of President Cleveland and his advisers to take the back track in this battle. Though often much discouraged, and with an exceedingly gloomy outlook before him, the president has from first to last had but one battlecry, and that unconditional repeal. The position of the president was very well expressed yesterday by Secretary Carlisle, when asked by your correspondent what he thought of the situation. "So far as we are concerned," said the secretary, "there will be no compromise. We shall either carry our point or be beaten. There is only one thing I like better than whipping another fellow, and that is to have the other fellow whip me."

THE VACANT CHAIRS.

NEW ENGLAND STATES DOES NOT PATRONIZE THE FAIR.

Attendance From the Wide Awake and Hustling West—Chicago Promises to Outdo Herself Oct. 9—A Great Banquet. The Beginning of the End.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—There are altogether too many vacant chairs in the New England state buildings to please an enthusiastic World's fair advocate, but the compensation is that they are delightful places to rest. The managers, too, have added embellishments until this group constitutes quite an art department in itself. On the front of the New Hampshire building is an inscription about the Switzerland of America, and within is an immense raised map or orographic diagram, of the state which proves the title true. Maine is where the "popular catalogue" gets in some more of its foolishness. It says that the building is "in the colonial style, finished with all the accessories and modern conveniences of a clubhouse," which it isn't, or anything like it.

New England Architecture.

It is in the style of a Swiss chalet (than which I know no building less like the colonial) and is fitted up as a historic art gallery, state museum and ladies' parlor, all in different rooms, of course. There is a darkened room with a deep recess containing a splendid model or panorama of Pemigewasset falls, and all the New Hampshireans declare in chorus that it is so true to fact that a sight of it is almost as good as being there in deed. Most of the available wall space is covered with fine pictures of the state's great men, from the first Indian fighter and British colonial governor down to date, and all over the place are paneled photographs representing almost every fine natural view in the state. In the ladies' room are many curiosities—the governor's chair, brought from England long before the Revolution, and it's a good one; two dolls, made, painted and dressed by a lady 82 years old. Mrs. Emeline Curtis of Hartford; old cupboards, copper and wooden dishes, books and documents.

Maine has not so extensive an art gallery as her neighbor, but in the gentlemen's reading room is a magnificent moose—weight, when killed, 1,000 pounds—and so well stuffed, preserved, horned and glass eyed that he is a beauty in still life. In the main room, or common parlor, is a large painting of "The Grand Menan," by Harry Brown, and another of "A Morning Ride From Poland Spring House," by Scott Leighton. In the ladies' parlor there is a magnificent full length portrait of Mme. Lillian Nordica, which excites the enthusiasm of every visitor. Other portraits are of James G. Blaine, Georgia Cayvan and some citizens well known in Maine, but not to the nation. The building is large, constructed of material entirely from Maine, and owing to the small attendance it is usually as clean and quiet as a palatial private mansion.

An Exception.

Connecticut also has built entirely of material brought from the state, and this building and that of Rhode Island are, if possible, still quieter than Maine's. In fact, most visitors only care to see the outside of the Rhode Island house because of its quaint appearance. It has been presented to the city of Chicago and will stand in some one of the parks. Massachusetts house is an exception among the New England buildings, either because there are many more visitors from that state or because of its historic interest, it is well filled. The array of portraits is very fine, beginning with John Endicott and Robert Winthrop and continuing down the line of great ones to Hoar and Sumner. There is also a regular museum of historical relics, as indeed there is in each of the old state buildings, New Jersey being at least equal to any other. There is abundant room and much comfort in all, and all this is very nice, as aforesaid, but still it would help the looks of things greatly if we had about 50,000 New Englanders on the grounds daily.

And all the middle western states have done so well of late—95,000 here on Kansas day despite the alleged "hard times," 125,000 on Ohio day, 300,000 on Texas day, 175,000 on an average ever since, and so many Iowa people here for four or five days that only the early bird can even get into the state building. And all this time Chicago is ransacking land and sea—that is, the lakes—to collect big things for her day. Special tickets good for that day only are to be printed and merely shown for admittance, so they can be kept as souvenirs, and every big establishment is to buy a peck or two of them for free distribution among its employees. As a little illustration, the 200 laundries will send in over 5,000 employees, the big boot and shoe firms will send in nearly as many more, the stockyard men will march in en masse and one charitable organization will take in 800 poor children in a body of singing pilgrims. In short, if Chicago does half what she promises (and she sometimes does), there will be standing room only in Jackson park on Oct. 9.

Nearing the End.

On the 11th will come the great banquet, all the foreign commissioners and executive officers, with their wives, entertained by the city and exposition directors. Music hall is to be floored up for the tables, there will be music galore, the rest of us (the few who get in) can look on and listen from the gallery, a very few speeches will be made and each "strictly limited to five minutes"—hallelujah! Nevertheless I am satisfied that, her Columbus day aside, Chicago is mistaken as to the figure attendance. She thinks it will continue to increase, and I think the maximum is already reached and probably passed. Nearly all the farmers who intended to come have been here. Precisely, and "fall work is crowding." business has been resumed in the cities, and congress evidently does not intend to hurry itself for a world's fair or two. At least every third day here may now be called unfavorable, and the nights are getting cold. The managers have very sensibly voted to close permanently on the 30th, and my guess is that after the 11th the falling off will be rapid.

Be it remembered President Bonney and Dr. Barrows no longer "point with pride" at nor Rev. Joseph Cook to "view with alarm" the proceedings of the religious parliament, which is a thing of the past. Mohammed Alexander Russell Webb made an able defense of Islam and polygamy and was greeted with hisses and cries of "Shame!" and denounced as inciting to crime; Count Bernstorff of Berlin "answered" all the Buddhists and "other agnostics" and "ethical schools." Evangelist B. Fay Mills took the parliament by storm, as it were; two native Christians of Asiatic Turkey gave pathetic pictures of matters there; Herant Kiretchjian of Constantinople told how the young men there are outgrowing Moslemism and ridiculed Mohammed Webb till the assembly roared with laughter, and many other remarkable things were said and done at that remarkable gathering, but this sentence is already too long for the average reader's breath.

In journeying recently with a traveling man friend, the conversation took such shape that he took a bottle from his grip, of Brant's Extract of Blackberry, saying: "I never travel without it. I am easily affected by the change of water, Chicago water especially always troubles me, but a dose or two of Brant's Blackberry quickly cures the trouble." He had it right and if the thousands who travel and visit Chicago this summer are "Wise like the drummer" to have Brant's Blackberry with them, they will find it a very useful article. 25 cent bottles of J. J. Orr, Tecumseh. 3

At a school examination the inspector asked a boy why the earth turned round the sun on its own axis. The boy answered with great promptitude: "Because it doesn't want to get roasted too much on one side."

Weak Supports Cause Disaster in a Mine Near Crystal Falls.

The Michigamme River Pours Into the Mansfield Mine and Twenty-Eight Workmen Are Drowned in the Fatal Shaft.

CAUGHT WITHOUT WARNING.

CRYSTAL FALLS, Sept. 30.—With a roar and rush the waters of the Michigamme river broke through the Mansfield mine shortly after 9 o'clock Thursday night, drowning twenty-eight of the employes at work directly under the stream. The eighteen men who escaped were employed in the lower levels. The accident occurred between become known until later. None of the bodies have been recovered and it is believed it will be necessary to divert the channel of the river before they can be secured. The mine caved in from the top to the bottom, entailing a property loss of $600,000.

Following is a correct list of the dead: Sam Peters, married; James Strongman, married; W. H. Pierce, married; Swan Johnson, Mike Harrington, Frank Rocco, Al Torresani, Frank Johnson, Sam Johnson, Shellimo Zadra, Peter Turry, Nicelo Fontani, Charles Pohl, married; John Regula, Ole Carlson, married; Joe Kola, married; John Holmstrom, Rose Fortimato, John Kirshe, John Randala, John Warner, Oscar Lundquist, Chris Arcangelo, Anto Stefano, Augusi Cologna, O. Constanti, Vigilis Zadra, Celesti Negri.

The Mansfield mine is situated on the banks of the Michigamme river, about 6 miles east of Crystal Falls, the county seat of Iron county. It has been working between three and four years and has shipped about 60,000 tons of Bessemer ore. The ore lenses dipped rapidly beneath the stream and for more than two years the chief workings have been directly under the bed of the river. There has been much trouble with water and predictions have not been wanting that the river would some day break through the roof of the mine.

The generally accepted theory as to the cause of the disaster is that the timbers on the fifth level gave way and allowed the levels above and at last the river to crash down upon the fated men.

The night shift had gone down, and though some one noticed that more water than usual was coming into the mine no special alarm was felt, as the pumps seemed to be able to keep the drifts free. So the work went on in its usual course until the roar of water made the first announcement of danger. So fast came the flood that it is doubtful if the men in the upper levels were able to reach the shaft at all.

The scenes of horror and death in the upper levels can only be imagined, for no one escaped to tell the tale. Had the men been able to reach the shaft death would still be certain, for the old, or No. 1 shaft, the only direct means of reaching the upper levels, collapsed and fell in about 9:30, cutting off all escape that way.

Most of the survivors were at work on the bottom level, which was not stopped out, and therefore did not cave. Andrew Sullivan, a night boss, was on this level and heard the crash above. He divined what had happened and called to his men to follow him up the ladder-way. The draft caused by the cave extinguished their lights and the men were compelled to feel their way through the darkness. All but four men on this level reached the ladder-way in safety and the ascent was begun. When the men reached the fourth level a torrent of water poured down the shaft. The men could proceed, but could breathe only at the landings as the several levels were reached, so great was the pressure caused by the influx of water. They were nearly dead when they reached the surface. Their four comrades remained on the sixth level, their avenue of escape having been cut off by the water.

Tony Buletto, the skip-tender at the fourth level, was standing near the shaft with Frank Rocco, a night boss; or foreman, when the first crash came. They knew what had happened and anticipated the result, but Rocco heroically refused to go up in the skip until he had warned his men of the danger imminent. He went back into the drift and perished with his comrades. Buletto came to the surface in the skip and is the only man who went to work on the fourth level left to tell the story.

The scene at the mine location has been heartrending. Weeping women and crying children have crowded up to the gaping pit to view the last resting place of husband and father. The spot has been visited by thousands of curious people and the tragic event is the one topic of discussion in the Lake Superior country. No special censure to the mining company is being manifested. The mine inspector has fully vindicated the company and says that the system of mining employed in this section of the country, the timbering system, is alone to blame for the disaster.

MARQUETTE, Sept. 30.—John M. Longyear, of this city, is one of the chief owners of the Mansfield mine property. He said that the land had been leased to Calhoun & Tenney, of Chicago, and that they had formed the Mansfield Mining company. Mr. Longyear's belief is that the disaster was caused by "robbing" the mine; that is, by working in a reckless manner and tearing down pillars of ore in the upper levels that should have been left to support the roof.

The mine inspector of Iron county will conduct a most rigid investigation to ascertain the cause of the disaster at the Mansfield mine. The vein of ore was only 16 feet wide and the nature of the ground was such that experts say it was easy to afford an adequate support to the hanging wall of the mine.

Chicago's Sights.

Every visitor to Chicago should see Lincoln Park, which is probably the most attractive resort of the kind in the country. It is situated immediately on the lake shore, is easy of access, and the home of the beautiful in nature and art. Among its special attractions are its lakes and lily ponds; its conservatory of rare plants; its electric fountain; its monuments to the memory of Lincoln, Grant, Schiller, and others; its artesian wells; its floral designs, walks and drives; and last, but not least, its collection of wild animals, which is said to be second to few in the world. The Park is free to visitors at all times, and its landscapes, hills and unequaled views of Lake Michigan make it restful to the eye while its amplitude of seats gives assurance of physical comfort at the same time. The authorities in charge will be found ready to answer questions, and direct strangers to the various objects of interest.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a coustitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. PENTECOST POINTERS.

The bracing, wine-like air and lovely tinted fields and woods of October are with us again. How swiftly the seasons fly!

It is reported that Dr. Perkins is about to move away from his farm. He will be greatly missed by many patients

The news came Monday morning that the tenant on a farm in this vicinity decamped "between two days," and left his creditors to mourn his absence.

Henry C. Daniels has advertised his farm stock, tools etc. for sale the 17th, and we hear he will take up his residence in Chicago with his sons, who are in business there.

"The melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,"—so thinks the farmer lad who strips the ripe husks from the ear, or splits the pumpkins for the pigs or digs the "Murphys" brown, but longs to tote a ten-pound gun from sunup to sundown.

"No hunting or shooting on these premises" stares all the would-be Nimrods in the face, on every barn. Some of them cannot read, perhaps, is the reason that so many gunners are heard popping away at the squirrels and other denizens of the wood.

The Baptist church at Onsted held a three days' meeting from last week Friday to Sunday, with delegates from Jackson, Deerfield, Hudson and other points. Those from this place who attended pronounced the speaking more than usually good and the singing by Mrs. Gibbs, Mrs. Maxwell and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hynes excellent.

"G. W. Fuller succeeds E. Buck as P. M. at Pentecost. Buck refused to get out and the Bissell P. M. sweeper was run over him and he was removed, etc."—Adrian Press. The above item is true, except that Mr. Buck did not refuse to get out, as no one wished him to vacate the office, with the exception of a very few persons. Mr. Buck has not held the office quite two years and had a right to expect to remain two years longer, as his predecessor did, holding the office nearly three years under a Republican administration, although he was himself a democrat. The present postmaster, Mr. Buck, is thoroughly competent to manage the office with the assistance of his wife, and as he is absolutely unable to move about except in a wheeled chair we therefore look upon it as a very ungenerous thing to do to deprive him of the office in the way it was done.

MACON MUSIC.

Married, at the home of the bride's parents, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 3d, 1893, by Rev. J. I. Gulick, Mr. Percy K. Morgan and Miss May E. Osgood, all of Macon, Mich.

Although the evening was dark, with a heavy rain falling, the beautiful residence of Wm. Osgood was well filled to witness the marriage ceremony of the youngest daughter, May, with Percy K., son of Charles Morgan, of Macon. The presents, bearing testimony of true friendship, were numerous and valuable, as well as useful. The wedding march was rendered by Miss Anna Osborne, the music, subdued and gentle, being continued during the solemnization of the marriage contract. The congratulation of the many friends was followed by an abundant provision in the dining room of all that could please and satisfy the appetite. The evening was spent in a most enjoyable manner with conversation and music, and at midnight the many guests returned to their homes, leaving with the newly married couple the most earnest wishes for their temporal and spiritual prosperity and happiness.

Practical Civil Service Reform.

A gentleman who recently called on Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury—singular to say, not on offices intent—was a witness of a very significant little incident. A member of Congress presented one of his consituents with authenticated "claims," and urged on the Secretary his appointment to a certain place. Mr. Carlisle listened to both with practised courtesy, and sent for the chief of the division in whose charge the place fell. After inquiry as to the duties and record of the incumbent, the Secretary asked, blandly, "Could you not get along without any one in this place?" The answer was prompt, "Yes, if necessary." "Very well, you may abolish the place." This is not the usual way of looking at a bit of "patronage" sought by an influential Congressman for a political favorite. But it is a sound way, and if Mr. Carlisle can inspire those under him with the sentiment of obligation to the people rather than to political friends which he himself feels, he can bring about some notable changes.

An incident in a slightly different line, but denoting the same spirit of devotion to the public rather than party interests, is the promotion to be Solicitor of the Treasury of Mr. F. A. Reeve. This gentleman was brought into the service under Mr. Hayes, and has advanced steadily since, and though he is a Democrat—a war Democrat from Tennessee—he may be relied on to be independent of partisanship in the performance of his important duties. The promotion of Mr. Fisher, of Massachusetts, who entered the Patent Office by the way of competitive examination, is another example of the same methods. The wonder is that the contrast between these and the spoils methods does not lead to the complete abandonment of the latter.—Harper's Weekly.

FOREIGN MISSION WORK.

Twentieth Annual Meeting in Detroit of the Synod of Michigan.

DETROIT, Oct. 5.—The twentieth annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the synod of Michigan opened yesterday morning in the Fort Street Presbyterian church, Mrs. A. F. Bruske, Alma, president, occupying the chair.

Mrs. C. G. Brownell read the report of the treasurer of the contingent fund, after which committees on resolutions and the nomination of officers were appointed. Over $145,000 has been contributed during the twenty years' existence of the Detroit presbytery.

Mrs. Tracey, who has been a missionary in India for twenty-three years, gave an interesting account of the condition of the women of that country.

Mrs. C. G. Brownell read a report of the extra or special work, stating that twenty-nine new societies had been added during the past year, making the total number now in the Michigan synod 248.

Mrs. W. S. Jerome, of Pontiac, read a paper on "Young People and Missions," which had special reference to the work of Christian Endeavor societies. There were over 2,000,000 Christian Endeavorers, and if each contributed two cents a week it would amount to $2,080,000 a year.

The committee appointed to nominate officers for the ensuing year reported as follows: President, Mrs. A. F. Bruske, Alma; secretary and treasurer of contingent fund, Mrs. C. G. Brownell, Detroit; secretary of Y. P. and C. E. societies, Mrs. W. S. Jerome, Pontiac; recording secretary, Mrs. J. F. Seeley, Caro. The report was adopted. It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Flint.

In the evening Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, formerly of Detroit, was the speaker. His subject was "Missions," and during his remarks he said he believed that the apex of historical development had been reached in the present age. Never before had there been so great advancement made in material, in mental, or in moral achievement. The world was at the feet of the church, which was furnished with all the facilities for the work of Jesus Christ. He did not much believe in a parliament of religion which brought all creeds together, joined hands in sweet charity and resulted in erecting confusionism. There was but one religion, and it was contained in the Book of Books. It was "Jesus died for me," as Spurgeon said on his death bed. That was the one true religion.

DEAD IN HIS CELL.

A Noted Bay City Character Grows Weary of Life.

BAY CITY, Oct. 4.—Frank Adams was lying dead in a cell in the police station. Adams was a bartender and confidence man. For a week he was out of the city traveling from one place to another gambling and then came home, became drunk and threw his mistress downstairs. He was arrested, together with Brick Thomas, whom he accused of larceny from the person. Both men were released, there being no case against Thomas. Soon after Adams was found on the street in a drunken condition, and placed in the city station. When the officer went to his cell to bring him out for trial, Adams was lying on the floor as if in a drunken stupor. Two hours later he was dead. Adams was aged about 45 years, and came here from Grand Rapids. A year ago he attempted to commit suicide at Saginaw, by taking a dose of laudanum. Last spring he made a second attempt. There was no poison found in the cell he occupied.

To the ardent wooer "no" news is hardly good news.

THE FARM HOME-READING CIRCLE.

Of the Michigan Agricultural College, for Promoting Agriculture and Kindred Pursuits.

In December, 1892, the factulty of the Michigan Agricultural College appointed a committee to prepare a course of reading especially adapted to the requirements of farmers, gardeners, fruit growers, stock breeders, etc. The course was outlined and circulars issued. So many expressions of appreciation have been received that the managers have been encouraged to carefully revise the course and take steps to widen its scope and increase its influence. The State Board of Agriculture have made provision for the printing, correspondence, postage, etc., connected with the course so that the only expense to members is books.

The primary object of the F. H. R. C. is to promote agriculture and kindred pursuits. The circle offers a systematic course of reading. It furnishes books through the secretary at greatly reduced prices. It acts in a limited manner, as a bureau of information on agricultural subjects. All cannot enjoy a course at the Agricultural College, but no one is so situated that he cannot cultivate habits of observation and study. The aim has been to supply a course which shall furnish practical information and assist those who desire to secure some knowledge of science as applied to agriculture. It is believed there are many to embrace the opportunities offered by such a course.

The course is not limited as to age or occupation. All persons interested are invited to join. Old and young, fathers and mothers, boys and girls, send in your applications. Farmers' boys and girls are especially urged to undertake systematic reading. You are surrounded by a great laboratory. The fields, gardens, orchards and meadows are your class rooms. Interest your fathers and mothers. Ask questions. If you are unable to find an answer by consulting the index of your book, write to the secretary and he will refer it to the proper authority. No one is too old to join the circle. Let us all undertake the regular thoughtful reading of good books, in place of the aimless, careless reading of newspapers.

While it is recommended that grange patron's lodges, alliances and other farmers' organizations form circles for reading and discussion, yet the great value of the course will manifest itself to those so situated that reading in circles would be impossible. As the name implies, it is a "Farm Home Reading Circle." Do not let the coming winter season pass without taking up the work in one or more of the classes

Five classes are offered: Soils and Crops, Live Stock, Garden and Orchard, Home Making, and Political Science. These classes were outlined by men prominent in their special lines, and, so far as it is possible, are arranged progressively. It is urged that the course be taken up, as recommended, and finished. However, if for any reason books further along in the course are desired, they may be ordered and credit will be given for their completion. No requirement is made as to the order in which classes shall be taken up.

Considerable interest will attach to the information that our former well-known townsman, B. S. Barnes, has just been elected mayor of Ponca, one of the new towns which recently sprung into existence in the Cherokee strip, Oklahoma territory. He was chosen by acclamation, and invested with the power of appointing all city officers. He, therefore, very thoughtfully, made John W. Dalton, ex-member of the legislature and formerly residing in Madison, city treasurer. Banes and Dalton were the two moving spirits in the organization of the town.—Adrian Times.

WORLD'S FAIR FOLKS.

THE VISITORS ARE ALMOST AS INTERESTING AS THE EXHIBITS.

South Africanders Enthusiastic Over the Latest News From Their Country—Cheering Reports In the Mining Building—A Wet Day on the Plaisance—Good Order.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 9.—[Special.]—The Midway plaisance is now and again the dreariest place on earth. True, we have mild October days and an occasional warm one, but we have many that are cold and a few very cold, wet and muddy. Coney Island in February, a picnic ground garnished with gay bangings and then spoiled by a cold rain, a May day party when all the light dresses have been drenched by a sudden shower—these are indeed types of aborted grotesque and beauty, but combine them all and raise the sum to the fifth power, and you will have an idea of how the plaisance looks at times. On the day of the cold rain, which is already historic, I surveyed the plaisance. With gum boots, overcoat collar turned up and a stout umbrella, I surveyed it in detail, and I was pretty near monarch of all I surveyed.

Dadoes In Mud.

The mud in the worst places was not more than half bootleg deep, and so a man could get around easy enough, and a few resolute and well shod ladies were doing the place because, as they said, "We've got to do it now or not at all." The outer dress could be raised, you know, and the rich dado of dark yellow mud on the white skirt, with imitations of lotus flowers in "spattered work," did not signify, for the skirt could be washed. So they were just as jolly as the men. The miserable ones were the inhabitants, for they had to stay and yet could sell nothing on such a day.

The only jolly set on the whole plaisance were the Irish maids in Lady Aberdeen's village, and they declared that in their part of Ireland "this would pass for a fair day." I don't think much of the Aberdeen exhibit, and the prices are, I suspect, about twice as high as those asked for similar goods by the hucksters who come out to the transatlantic steamers in the port of Queenstown, but the girls are pretty, and don't you forget it. Some of them are as witty as pretty, and on such a day they had nothing to do but stand outside and talk.

New and Important Statistics.

There is one part of the exhibit that is always new to me, and that is in the mining department. And I learn with pleasure that all the British colonial exhibitors take great pains to make their part of it new in fact—that is, they do not simply allow the original exhibits and reports to stand. They have made very full and complete arrangements to get the latest attainable news almost daily from their respective countries, so the figures published a month or two ago are no longer exact. In short, there is a complete mining bureau maintained and each section brought to date. As the old western saying runs, "I don't know much myself, but I love to talk with men who do know something," and there is just the same difference between the home English and these Australians, New Zealanders and South Africans, as between the slow denizens of an inland village in our east and the bright enterprisers of the Rocky mountains and Pacific coast.

It is too late in the fair to describe a department, but there is one fresh fact of immense interest just now to all Americans—the renewal of gold mining. All the colonial men say the decline in silver has had the same effect with them as in our west, only more so. Many thousands have abandoned silver mining and are ransacking the ranges for gold. Scores of old workings have been reopened, and the gold supply is increasing rapidly. Enthusiastic Australians offer wagers that in ten or a dozen years the two precious metals will beat the old ratio. "China diggings" in California this would mean places yielding but a dollar or so per day to the man are now found very profitable with improved progresses, and such is the cheapness of provisions, tools and transportation that placer sand even lode mining for gold costs but a third what it did in the great placer days of California.

Gold May Become a Drag.

The greatest news, however, comes from South Africa. When their exhibit was placed here, the agents declared their belief that the Witwatersrand field would show as much gold as did California and Australia together in 1853. The government's corps of scientific men and engineers has since completed a series of borings to the depth of 2,500 feet here and there over the entire basin, and, according to the exhibitors, these borings prove an underlay of ore ten to simply incalculable. The reef as first opened was 28 miles long, but the basin is so wide that near 10,000 square miles are said to contain gold. The excited Africanders now figure out that a yield of $10 per ton is the least to be expected, that the ore can be raised and reduced, even at present high rates for labor, at $2 per ton, and that the amount concentrated to be there runs so far into the trillions that there is really some danger of the stuff becoming a drag. And they are getting fresh dispatches acting to their faith.

Of course we know that the statements of gold miners must be taken cum grano, as we say in Paris, but unquestionably there is much gold in the mountains of Africa. The formation proves it. I was just beginning to spell out items in the papers when the California gold excitement began, and recall one statement to this effect: "A lucky miner got out one nugget of pure gold which contained $884, 285.75. As he sat on it and wiped his reeking brow a man passed with a hot mess of pork and beans. The miner offered to saw off $77,000 for it, but the eaterer stood him off for $10. Provisions were high in those times. The best peaches raised at Sonora retained for $1 each. We may discount our African friends 75 per cent and still have gold enough, but they are delightful talkers, and I like them. They bring back those breezy times in the wild west when my foot was in the stirrup and my heart was free in the mountains.

A Tribute to the Orderly.

I have now been here 21 weeks and have not witnessed a disturbance, heard an angry altercation or seen a troublesomely drunken man on the grounds. There have been few men who required prompt treatment by the Columbian guards, though I have seen no instance of it, and with very rare exceptions those gentlemen are guides and not guards. Much of this is due, no doubt, to the inherent gentility and good humor of an American crowd, but much also to the fact that the visitors are the most intelligent of their several classes and are here to see and enjoy. It speaks well for our people. Outside, I regret to add, the previous good record has been broken, and there has been a good deal of petty stealing about the hotels and saloons. There have been some accidents on the grounds, and many prostrations from heat, but of the latter there will be no more.

THEY SHAKE HANDS.

THE SUPREME COURT MAKES ITS CALL UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Meeting For the Autumn Term—Wall Street Fooled For Once—More Panic Rumors—Futile Attempts to Influence Votes.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 9.—[Special.]—The supreme court met today at noon for its autumn term. There were the usual scenes. Promptly at noon the justices filed from their robing room across the main corridor of the capitol where a crowd had gathered to see them enter the chamber. As they ascended the bench the old crier lifted his right hand and sang out as he has been singing these many years: "Oyez! Oyez! All having business with the honorable supreme court of the United States draw near and give attention, for the court is now sitting. God bless the United States [illegible] great crowd had gathered in the courtroom to see the opening, many attracted by curiosity to have a look at the new justice, Mr. Hornblower.

The supreme court is one of the spectacular features of the American capital. It is one of the first things strangers in town inquire for, and great is their disappointment when told during the recess months that the court is not in session. They content themselves with a careful examination of the historic chamber. It does not take a great number of people to make a crowd in this small but beautiful hall. Not more than 100 or 150 persons can find seats behind the railing, and visitors are not permitted to stand. The dignity and decorum of this great court will not brook either conversation or whispering, and when strangers come to see the august tribunal they must be very careful how they deport themselves if they wish to avoid an invitation from the officials to desist or depart.

Calling on the President.

The session of the court today was very short. The chief justice made a few announcements of a routine nature, and then the court adjourned in a body, accompanied by its officers, to carriages which were in waiting and drove immediately to the executive mansion to make the call upon the president which is prescribed by tradition. What took place in the president's library during this call is only a matter of conjecture. But the history of these occasions is that the chief magistrate shakes hands with the chief justice and then with each associate justice, always in the order of their seniority, and while this is being done pleasantries are exchanged and a few quiet jokes cracked.

The interview between the court and the president today lasted about six minutes, and tomorrow the justices will get down to work in earnest. They have a great deal to do, the post of justice of the supreme court not being a sinecure by any means. During sessions the court usually sits from noon till about 5 o'clock. After dinner the justices always find briefs and transcripts to examine, and many of them work until midnight or later four or five nights each week.

Cannot "Go to the Country" on Silver.

President Cleveland astonished some of the members of his cabinet a few days ago by saying that he wished he had the power possessed by the queen of England to prorogue parliament. If the president had that power, he would now dismiss congress from its sitting and send it back to the country for re-election, the silver repeal bill being the issue upon which men would be compelled to make their stand before the electors. Of course the president has no such power, and in this instance it would be of little advantage to dismiss congress, for the reason that it is in the senate, which corresponds to the house of lords, that the president's policy is met with opposition and determined obstruction.

Yet it might not be a bad thing if our president had the power to send not only the members of the house, but members of the senate, back to the people for their indorsement or rejection whenever a climax is reached in matters of important legislation. By the English system it is always possible for the crown to secure at any time an expression of public opinion directly upon any pending measure. In this country a legislative question which becomes the bone of bitter contention at a certain session of congress may have almost disappeared from the public mind by the time the public electicns are reached.

Wall Street Easily Fooled.

One of the strange things about the repeal bill fight in the senate has been the ease and persistency with which Wall street was deceived as to the situation. While senators, newspaper correspondents and many other people in Washington were able clearly to perceive that the repeal bill could not be passed without some sort of a compromise or without many weeks of delay, Wall street would believe nothing else but that the bill was going through in short order. Every day for weeks past dispatches have been displayed in Wall street and sent thence throughout the country to the effect that repeal would pass within a few days. But, like the ignis fatuus or the will o' the wisp, no one has ever yet overtaken with the promised pleasures of the bill.

One would naturally suppose that if any people in the country were likely to be well informed as to what was going on in the senate they would be the big brokers and operators of the street, but Wall street has been deceived as to the course of repeal to the disgust of the whole country. An explanation of the offered by a senator to your correspondent is that Wall street has a habit of believing what it wants to hear and of refusing credence to the things which are unwelcome. "In other words," said this senator, "Wall street is a big ostrich which hides its head in the sand when danger threatens, and because it cannot see imagines it has averted disaster."

Sizing Up Panic Rumors.

A rumor went round the capitol a few days ago that another panic was imminent. In some manner or another a tip had come over from New York that unless the repeal bill were speedily passed the dence would be to pay in financial and commercial circles in the metropolis and elsewhere. It was even reported that a certain great mercantile house, name not given, was on the ragged edge and would go down in disaster unless the senate were to afford relief by passing the long debated bill. But this rumor had no effect whatever upon the opinions or the conduct of senators.

Those senators who oppose repeal at once ascribed this story to the desire on the part of its originators to bulldoze the senate. They assume the rumor was set afloat merely for the purpose of influencing votes. Even if another panic were to come, these senators would not be shaken from their position, for their explanation would be that the panic was manufactured to order by Wall street, just as they charge that last summer's panic was manufactured by the street and a few bankers for their own selfish ends.

A NEW SCHEME.

It Will Interest Educators All Over the State.

Proposition to Organize Michigan Into Educational Districts—The Object to Unify School Work—The Provisional Lists.

EDUCATIONAL RALLIES.

LANSING, Oct. 4.—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Pattengill desires to organize the state into educational districts and to hold in each district occasional meetings, which may be designated as "school officers' councils" and "educational rallies." The object of the councils is the better to unify the school work, and to bring into closer relations the school officers of the state, county, township and district. To this end meetings will be called in certain central points, where converging lines of railroad meet, and the county boards of examiners, township trustees and district officers of several adjacent counties will be invited to attend a day's conference with the state superintendent. It is hoped that at least the boards of examiners of each county will surely attend, and as many of the other officers as possible; especially those most accessible to the place of meeting.

On the evening of the day of the council an educational rally will be held. Short addresses, essays, recitations, singing and discussions will be features of the evening. Since the councils meet Friday, and the rallies are held Friday evening, the County Teachers' association of the county where the council meets may profitably call a meeting of their association for the day following, so that the state superintendent and the school officers may arrange to attend it.

The following provisional lists of districts are suggested, the first name indicating the place of meeting:

First—Cassopolis: Berrien, Cass, St. Joseph.

Second—Hillsdale: Branch, Hillsdale, Lenawee.

Third—Wayne: Moore, Wayne, Washtenaw.

Fourth—Kalamazoo: Van Buren, Kalamazoo Allegan, Barry, Calhoun.

Sixth—Port Huron: Macomb, St. Clair, Sanilac, Huron.

Seventh—Lapeer: Tuscola, Lapeer, Oakland, Genesee.

Eighth—Owosso: Saginaw, Shiawassee, Clinton, Gratiot.

Ninth—Grand Rapids: Kent, Ionia, Ottawa, Muskegon, Oceana.

Tenth—Big Rapids: Newaygo, Montcalm, Mecosta.

Eleventh—Bay City: Bay, Midland, Gladwin, Arenac.

Twelfth—Cadillac: Isabella, Clare, Osceola, Wexford, Kalkaka, Missaukee.

Thirteenth—Manistee: Mason, Lake, Manistee.

Fifteenth—Charlevoix: Antrim, Emmet, Charlevoix, Manitou.

Sixteenth—Gaylord: Otsego, Cheboygan, Crawford, Roscommon, Oscoda, Montmorency, Ozemaw.

Seventeenth—Harrisville: Alcona, Alpena, Presque Isle, Iosco.

Eighteenth—St. Ignace: Mackinaw, Luce, Chippewa.

Nineteenth—Negaunee: Marquette, Alger, Schoolcraft, Delta.

Twentieth—Iron Mountain: Menominee, Iron, Dickinson, Gogebic.

Twenty-first—Houghton: Houghton, Baraga, Keweenaw, Ontonagon.

THE WARDEN QUESTION.

The Attorney General Requested to Apply for Quo Warranto.

LANSING, Oct. 4.—The matter of determining whether Eugene Parsell or Otis Fuller is the warden of the state house of correction at Ionia will probably be brought before the supreme court the first of next week. Harrison Geer, of Lapeer, the attorney for the Ionia prison board in its tilt with Warden Parsell, was in the city and requested the attorney general to apply to the supreme court for a writ of quo warranto to compel Mr. Parsell to show cause why he should not surrender the keys of the institution to Mr. Fuller.

The attorney general has taken Mr. Geer's application under consideration and sent to Ionia for books and papers which will enable him to investigate the merits of the case. As this is the first time the attorney has been consulted about the matter, it will probably require several days for him to make a thorough investigation.

As Mr. Parsell's salary has been cut off by the board of control, he is equally anxious with Mr. Fuller for a speedy determination of his rights.

Establishes an Alibi.

PORT HURON, Oct. 4.—The examination of Alonzo Zavitz on a charge of an attempted felonious assault on Margaret Clark, was continued in the police court, the defense attempting to prove an alibi. The defendant, his wife, daughter and another lady testified that the prisoner was not in the vicinity where the crime is alleged to have been committed. The examination was not completed.

Gave a Mortgage.

SAGINAW, Oct. 6.—The Ayres Lumber & Salt company gave a mortgage to Eben R. Ayres as trustee for the benefit of the company's creditors, amounting to $62,000. It is said the assets greatly exceed the liabilities. The Saginaw Printing & Binding company asked for a receiver this morning.

Registration at the University.

ANN ARBOR, Oct. 4.—It is unofficially reported that the registration at the university to-night is 1,947. This is not far below the registration on the same date last year, and as many upper classmen have not arrived yet the showing is better than expected.

Mother of Two Preachers.

HOLLAND, Oct. 4.—Mrs. Henry Broek, aged 80 years, died to-day. She was one of the earliest and most prominent settlers here, and was the mother of Rev. John Broek, of South Holland, Ill., and of Rev. D. Broek, of Grandville, Mich.

Sent to the Reform School.

PORT HURON, Oct. 5.—Sam Wellman, 14 years old, has been sentenced to the reform school until he is 17, for breaking into the Methodist chapel on Water street and stealing Sunday school funds amounting to $1.50.

Messrs. Lippman Bros., Savannah, Ga.
Dear Sirs—I wish to give my testimonial in regard to your valuable medicine, P. P. P., for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, biliousness, etc. In 1861 I was attacked with bilious muscular rhematism and have been a martyr to it ever since. I tried all the medicines I ever heard of, and all the doctors in reach, but I found only temporary relief; the pains were so bad at times that I did not care whether I lived or died. My digestion became so impaired that everything I ate disagreed with me. My wife also suffered so intensely with dyspepsia that her life was a burden to her; she would be confined to her bed for weeks at a time; she also suffered greatly from giddiness and loss of sleep. Some time in March I was advised to take P. P. P., and before we (my wife and I) had finished the second bottle of P. P. P. our digestion began to improve. My pains subsided so much that I have been able to work and am feeling like doing what I haven't done before in a number of years. We will continue taking P. P. P. until we are entirely cured and will cheerfully recommend it to all suffering humanity. Yours very respectfully,
J. S. DUPRISS.

Cures Others

Will cure You, is a true statement of the action of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, when taken for diseases originating in impure blood; but, while this assertion is true of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, as thousands can attest, it cannot be truthfully applied to other preparations, which unprincipled dealers will recommend, and try to impose upon you, as "just as good as Ayer's." Take Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's only, if you need a blood-purifier and would be benefited permanently. This medicine, for nearly fifty years, has enjoyed a reputation, and made a record for cures, that has never been equaled by other preparations. AYER'S Sarsaparilla eradicates the taint of hereditary scrofula and other blood diseases from the system, and it has, deservedly, the confidence of the people.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

"I cannot forbear to express my joy at the relief I have obtained from the use of AYER'S Sarsaparilla. I was afflicted with kidney troubles for about six months, suffering greatly with pains in the small of my back. In addition to this, my body was covered with pimply eruptions. The remedies prescribed failed to help me. I then began to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla, and, in a short time, the pains ceased and the pimples disappeared. I advise every young man or woman, in case of sickness resulting from impure blood, no matter how long standing the case may be, to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla."—H. L. VIGOROUS EFFORTS MADE TO PASS THE REPEAL BILL

Old Senator Stewart Glories In His Ability to Talk Against Time—The Silver Fight and the Cabinet—Mr. Gorman and Secretary Carlisle.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 11.—[Special.]—At last a vigorous effort is being made to pass the Sherman repeal bill through the senate. We are sure to have some high old times in this chamber before the contest is over. The desire of the managers of the bill is to hold a quorum in the senate for a long time, if possible for a long enough time to tire out the opposition. But this is easier to hope about than to do. Abundant proof of the talking abilities of the silver senators has been afforded during the last few days. Old Senator Stewart is now in his element. The old man from Nevada, who looks so much like a patriarch of ancient mold, is never so happy as when the fighting is hot. He glories in his ability to make speeches on every occasion and of great length.

An evidence of his confidence in his own powers is found in a proposition which he made a few days ago to Senator Dubois, who has been one of the most active of the senators who oppose repeal. There were well defined rumors that Mr. Voorhees and his associates were about to force the fighting with these long night sessions in hope to wear out the strength of the opposition. Senator Dubois is young and vigorous, while Senator Stewart is 65. Yet the old man said to the young man:

"Dubois, when the hard fighting comes on, get three or four of the boys to stay with you, and you young fellows take one night, and I will take the next. By alternating on them I guess we can keep them busy."

"But can you hold up our end all by yourself?" asked Mr. Dubois.

"Don't you worry about me. I am an old hand at this business. I have fought Mexicans, Indians, mining camp thieves, claim jumpers and all sorts of things. I guess I can hold this senate up by the tail for a few weeks, taking every other night."

And then Senator Stewart smiled in full confidence in his own staying powers. Now the old gentleman has a chance to see what he can do.

Where the Rub Lies.

The repeal managers think they can quickly clear the decks for action. While a large number of amendments to the bill have been offered, these they propose to dispose of without delay. Under the rules of the senate a motion to lay on the table is not debatable, and by making this motion on amendment after amendment Senator Voorhees thinks the whole of them can be quickly disposed of. But the rub is how to suppress the silver senators who are insisting upon the right to debate. Under the rules of the senate there is no method by which debate can be cut off.

Friends of repeal have again asked Vice President Stevenson to construe the rules in such a way as to afford some relief, but the vice president declines to depart the slightest from the practices and traditions of the body. "When a question is pending, no motion shall be in order but the following," say the rules, and then is given a list of the motions which are in order. Among these there is no mention of a motion to vote nor to set a time for voting. Thus we have the anomaly of rules which do not by letter or explicit provision give a parliamentary body any method of producing a vote. It has ample opportunity to debate, but no way of closing debate and proceeding to that which many people regard as of more importance than discussion—to wit, voting.

Inasmuch as among these motions laid down in the rules as being in order is one to lay on the table, it follows that the rules of this great body provide means of killing a measure, but none to put life into it. It looks as if the rules were framed to prevent legislation rather than to promote legislation. According to the strict construction of the rules, legislation is almost impossible, save by unanimous consent or by surrender of the minority. The reader who takes these things into consideration will be better able to understand the bearings of the various moves made in this great fight from day to day.

Trouble With One Rule.

Where the repeal managers are having a great deal of trouble is with that rule which says a motion to amend shall always be in order. Under this the silver men may offer amendments to their heart's content. They may make these amendments so ridiculous that they will have to be voted down. They cannot be discussed, but the simple reading of them will consume a great deal of time. Besides, there are seven or eight other motions which the rule prescribes to be in order, such as to go into executive session, to adjourn, to postpone indefinitely, to take a recess, etc. Some of these are debatable, and some are not. But the great point, from the anti-speculator side of the case, is that the motions may be made with the sanction of the rules. On nearly all of them a roll call may be had, for the silver men are easily able to keep enough men on hand to demand the yeas and nays.

A roll call in the senate does not take three-quarters of an hour, as it does in the house, but it requires about 15 minutes, and some of these long night sessions are pretty sure to be taken up with an endless procession of roll calls. The silver senators say that between the inability of the other side to keep a quorum constantly on hand, the offering of new amendments, the making of motions for purposes of delay, demands for a roll call and other time consuming tactics they will be able to weather the storm when the repeal managers are now brewing for them.

Trouble In the Cabinet.

A curious thing about this silver fight has been the trouble it has caused in the president's cabinet. Quite a nice little row is reported between Secretary Carlisle and Secretary Lamont. It grows out of the silver contest. Lamont is a great friend of Senator Gorman's and has been inclined to take Gorman's part. Believing in Gorman's astuteness and loyalty, the same time ago reached the conclusion that a compromise would be absolutely necessary. But when he proposed it in cabinet meeting and mentioned Gorman as his authority, Mr. Carlisle was very angry. He declared he would have nothing to do with any compromise which Mr. Gorman favored. He did not believe much in Mr. Gorman anyway. To all this Lamont replied with some spirit, and President Cleveland had to step in to preserve the peace.

Expenses at Women's Colleges.

The absolutely necessary expenses of a girl who attends the leading women's colleges are said to be, Bryn Mawr, $475; Vassar, $400; Smith, $350; Wellesley, $350; Women's College of Baltimore, $300; Mount Holyoke, $200.

ART AT THE FAIR.

A STRUGGLE TO ADMIRE A RUSSIAN PAINTING.

An Unsophisticated View—Parallel Between Holland and Belgium Art—A Few Sad Subjects—Negative Beauties—An Essay on Snakes.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 11.—[Special.]—About this time in the week I take my regular lesson in high art. Of late I have been going to the Woman's building, because I could there have the guidance and instruction of a cultured friend, but by reason of much advice I have returned to the Art palace with a grim determination to like those paintings in the Russian section. I take my stand first before the much [illegible] No. 88—and resolutely enter on a study of its beauties, for my friends tell me I just must like it, or I can't be "cultured." I will not go so far as to say that any of the critics are influenced by the facts that this picture is the private property of the czar, Alexander III, that it is his favorite, and that he sent it here as a special compliment. But any American citizen, I suppose, is free to think.

A First Impression.

Well, it represents an incident when a Cossack chief received a peremptory order from some enemy of Russia, and, amid the riotous laughter of his men that any one should presume to threaten them, wrote his answer. Every one in the picture, I say, is supposed to be laughing, but it surely is the most painful laughter I ever saw on human faces. My first impression of this section was that every face in it, save perhaps half a dozen, showed pain or fear or anxiety. Under instruction of cultured friends, I decided that was all in my eye. I am now satisfied that my first impression was correct—or, if it was all in my eye, then said eye is set. If the Russians are not, taken by and large, a profoundly unhappy people, they had better take down their signs.

Before leaving here I shall try an experiment on these Russian paintings. I shall take an intelligent man from some interior town who has never studied art or heard much talk about it, and without naming a picture get his unsophisticated view. I think I know what he will say, and it will be something like this: "No. 75—"Little Russian Tobacco Smokers." "Well, they're just learning to smoke, or the tobacco is mighty bad." "No. 79—"Head of a Negro." "Huh! Have they skinned that negro alive or only just bulldozened him?" No. 24—"A Drowned Man In a Country Place." "The corpse is to be envied—he's the only happy looking one in the gang." No. 59—"A Night in Little Russia." "If their poor folks look that bad in the night, I'll hate to see 'em by day," and so on through the whole catalogue.

National Characteristics.

Now, it isn't so in the Polish section, and I wonder at it, for I had supposed the two peoples to be of the same general race and temperament. There is an equally great contrast, but on another line, between the paintings from Belgium and those from Holland. The former have the same light, airy grace as the French, while the latter are generally of a heavy and somber cast. No; this is not exactly what I mean, and I do not know what they call it in high art, but nearly all the Holland pictures show or suggest toil and weariness, or at least clean and simple poverty. The faces do not look unhappy, like those in the Russian section; in fact, they nearly all show a sort of ox eyed, and apple faced content, but there is a lack of the poetical. The Society of Polish Artists was so named, I believe, because it was to include Poles in many lands; but, in fact, all the pictures but two are credited to residents in Poland. The two outside artists are John Ciaglinski of St. Petersburg and M. Reyzner of Paris. Thirty-four of the artists are credited to Warsaw and all the rest to Cracow, because, I suppose, the only art schools are in those cities.

There are very few sad subjects—not a dozen among the 125 paintings—and over all are a certain lightness and gayety of treatment. One of the prettiest, to my taste, if not the finest in the room, is No. 5—Milda, the goddess of Love, in the depths of the sea beside her dear lover. It is an old Lithuanian legend. Milda fell in love with a fisherman, which so enraged Perkuns, god of thunder, that he killed the fisherman and changed the amber palace in the Baltic sea. The dark green water seems to ripple around the figures of Milda and her lover. In the distance, coming to her, is the boatload of Lithuanian soldiers. Another picture of the same legend is No. 25, "The Polish Queen," shows Hedwige threatening to drown herself in the Vistula. Her offended subjects, she will remember, [illegible] Jagello, Lithuanian duke, [illegible] Hedwige [illegible] and the next [illegible] Lithuania.

An Exile's Death.

One of the few sad pictures is No. 55, "Death of an Exile in Siberia." It is mournful enough, but inoffensive. No. 42, "Mass on Polish Soil," has received a first class medal and is certainly pretty, but I can't get up much enthusiasm over a picture of marble [illegible] No. 88, "The Vistula Flooding the Parliament Palace," excites a great deal of surprise and questions. It represents a crowd of young women on a couch looking toward the door with a half anxious, half expectant face, while on the table near by [illegible] announcement of a warrant. It is pretty, but a puzzle to those who have not read Brackstone's statement of the peculiar right of a feudal lord when any of his tenants were married.

An Uncanny Subject.

One of the hardest of the room is negative—there isn't a stake in it. It seems to me an artist must have a very high idea of his own talents to think he can make a snaky picture attractive, and after going through these galleries and examining such paintings I have half developed a new theory. I suspect that the instinctive dread we have of such reptiles and the fact that many primitive people look on them as emblems of wisdom are really due not to their venom, but to the fact that to them we see motion without a motor apparent. We can see the legs of a lizard and feel comparatively little repulsion, though some lizards are very poisonous. A snake glides with no muscular action apparent, and therefore always seems to be slipping up on somebody. Primitive man therefore considered it extremely subtle, while, in truth, it is the stupidest of highly organized vertebrates. Our Saxon ancestors showed fine linguistic sense when they derived snake and sneak from the same root verb. I want none of them in my art. I also have my opinion of people who handle snakes for a show and am mean enough not to be very sorry when one of them gets bitten.

WONDERFUL CURES!

THOMAS MINCHIN. MAJOR W. A. SIMFIELD.

Before Treatment. After Treatment. Before Treatment. After Treatment.

Nervous Debility and Catarrh Cured.

Thomas Minchin says: "I was reduced to a nervous wreck—only weighed 118 pounds. The result of early abuse was the cause. I had the following symptoms: Miserable mentally and physically, melancholy, nervousness, weakness, specks before the eyes, dizzy, poor memory, palpitation of the heart, flushing, cold hands and feet, weak back, dreams and losses at night, tired in the morning, pimples on the face, loss of ambition, burning sensation, kidneys weak etc. Doctors could not cure me; but Drs. Kennedy & Kergan by their New Method Treatment, cured me in a few weeks. I weigh now 170 pounds. It is three years since I have taken their treatment."

Blood Disease and Dyspepsia Cured.

Major Simfield says: "I had Dyspepsia and Catarrh of the Stomach for many years. To make matters worse I contracted a Constitutional Blood Disease. My bones ached. Blotches on the skin looked horrible. I tried sixteen doctors in all. A friend recommended Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. I began their New Method Treatment and in a few weeks was a new man with renewed life and ambition. I cannot say too much for those scientific doctors who have been in Detroit for fourteen years. I conversed with hundreds of patients in their offices who were being cured for different diseases. I recommend them as honest and reliable Physicians."

☞ These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been many experiments and in which there seemed no talent or ambition and has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture we had skilled mechanical engineers in which over 5,000 drawings of different machines made and different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, were carefully studied for many months, so that we could make an exhaustive report to the directors. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and this AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

The Aermotor pumping machinery is supplied with the most perfect bearings ever put on a windmill, as the result of an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

WALTER C. BURRIDGE, Recorder.

An Iowa editor hits it about right in this way: "The press endures the affliction of deadheadism from the bar, stage, society, individuals and corporations. It is expected to give strength to the weak, eyes to the blind, clothes to the naked, bread to the hungry, etc. It is asked to cover up infirmities, hide weaknesses, wink at quirks, bolster up all dull, sapheaded politicians and flatter the vain. It is, in short, to be all things to all men; and if it looks for any reward it is denounced as mean and sordid. There is no interest under the whole heavens that is expected to give so much to society without pay or thanks as the press.

A GALLOP THROUGH MIDWAY.

The Midway is a rather engaging place. If it were less commercial it would be great. It is not oppressively "tough." It did not shock Mr. Henry Waterson, as he himself has assured us, and I found myself sufficiently fibrous to withstand it. One can satiate one's appetite for strange sights and sounds, and regale one's self with several hundred distinct and seperate odors. He can hear a Viennese girl mix "Larboard Watch, Ahoy!" with twenty glasses of beer, or two Turks swear cheerfully at each other in perfect English. At the door of every building is a man who renders into Chicagoese the attractions within. Or, rather, he did until President Higinbotham put his vocal gymnastics under the ban; and now he cajoles his saints by [illegible] ing his powers of pantomime, inviting the passers-by within in an agony of dumb-show, the while violently whacking with his cane a large sign on which is printed the "patter" with which he was wont to assail the ears of the multitude. There is the muffled beating of tomtoms, the shuffling of many feet, the popcorn and lemonade, and thousands of dull, dusty, frowzy folks who stare and gape and imbibe oxlike impressions. With these are people of courage and behavior, and professional ladies from Paris with salmon-colored hair and black eyebrows. The bulk of the moving throng have "corn field" written all over them, and these children of Egypt (that is, lower Illinois) wear bonnets and costumes founded on Worth, but widely at variance. There is much merriment, especially at night, but one sees little drunkenness. The Columbian Guards do not stand in the position of a soldier; and if they did, I am not sure it would serve any good purpose beyond pleasing the eye." Strange fierce-looking negroes who have evidently not felt the elevating influence of South Carolina pass you, and Bedouins who are over-conditioned for folks who eat only barley and figs.

With the clank of a crooked sabre a man in blue clothes, turban, and red leather shoes strides down the middle of the street, and you feel with the sense of admiration creeping over you that if you were not an American you would be a savage of that tyre. One of Diamond Dick's Indians shuffles along in that week-kneed, in-toed plod which speaks of the thorough horseman when he "hits the hay." And so they go—humanity in all its dissimilitude. A composite photograph might be a goat or something else dear to the Darwinian heart.—Harper's Weekly.

The Game Laws.

TO THE PUBLIC:

Owing to misunderstanding and difficulty that has already arisen on account of the wording of Act 186 of 1893, the following explanation will be of interest:

The Act purports to amend Act 159 of 1891, so as to forbid fishing "in any of the inland lakes and streams of this State," in any manner except with hook and line; but it only amends Section 1 of the laws of 1891, without changing its title, which is, "An act to regulate the taking and catching fish in the inland lakes of this State," instead of "inland waters," as incorrectly given in the act of 1893. The old title, therefore, still remains as the title of the law, and as the provisions of the act of 1893 in regard to streams is not expressed in that title, it is contrary to Act IX. Sec. 20 of the Constitution of Michigan.

I therefore hold that where there is no local act fishing in streams is still governed by sections 4 and 5 of the general fish laws—Act III. of 1889—which permits spearing of certain fish in streams and also taking them with fish dip net.

The mistake was evidently due to an attempt in the closing hours of the session to change Senator Mear's bill relative to Clam Lake into a law governing the whole State.

CHAS. S. HAMPTON,
State Game and Fish Warden.

As there is a local act in regard to the Raisin River, which strictly forbids spearing or the use of dip nets, the above will have no effect on the Raisin River.

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to Get Twenty-five Hundred Dollars For Nothing.

Would you like to make twenty-five hundred dollars? If you would, read carefully what follows and you may see a way to do it.

The Press Claims Company devotes much attention to patents. It has handled thousands of applications for inventions, but it would like to handle thousands more. There is plenty of inventive talent at large in this country needing nothing but encouragement to produce good results. That encouragement the Press Claims Company proposes to to give.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

A patent strikes most people as an appalling formidable thing. The idea is that an inventor must be a natural genius, like Edison or Bell; that he must devote years to delving in complicated mechanical problems and that he must spend a fortune on duplicate experiments before be can get a new device to a patentable degree of perfection. This delusion the company desires to dispel. It desires to get into the head of the public a clear comprehension of the fact that it is not the great, complex, and expensive inventions that bring the best returns to their authors, but the little, simple, cheap ones—the things that seem so absurdly trivial that the average citizen would feel somewhat ashamed of bringing them to the attention of the Patent Office.

Edison says that the profits he has received from the patents on all his marvelous inventions have not been sufficient to pay the cost of his experiments. But the man who conceived the idea of fastening a bit of rubber cord to a child's ball so that it would come back to hand when thrown, made a fortune out of his scheme. The modern sewing machine is a miracle of ingenuity—the product of the toil of hundreds of busy brains through a hundred and fifty years, but the whole brilliant result rests upon the simple device of putting the eye of the needle at the point instead of at the other end.

THE LITTLE THINGS ARE MOST VALUABLE

Comparatively few people regard themselves as inventors, but almost everybody has been struck, at one time or another, with ideas that seemed calculated to reduce some of the little frictions of life. Usually such ideas are dismissed without further thought. "Why don't the railway company make its car windows so that they can be slid up and down without breaking the passengers' backs?" exclaims the traveler. "If I were running the road I would make them in such a way."

"What was the man that made the saucepan thinking of?" grumbles the cook. "He never had to work over a stove, or he would have known how it ought to have been fixed."

"Hang such a collar button!" growls the man who is late for breakfast. "If I were in the business I'd make buttons that wouldn't slip out, or break off, or gouge out the back of my neck."

And then the various sufferers forget about their grievances and begin to think of something else. If they would sit down at the next convenient opportunity, put their ideas about car windows, saucepans, and collar buttons into practical shape, and then apply for patents, they might find themselves as independently wealthy as the man who invented the iron umbrella ring, or the one who patented the fifteen puzzle.

A TEMPTING OFFER.

To induce people to keep track of their bright ideas and see what there is in them, the Press Claims Company has resolved to offer a prize.

To the person who submits to it the simplest and most promising invention, from a commercial point of view, the company will give twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, in addition to refunding the fees for securing the patent.

It will also advertise the invention free of charge.

This offer is subject to the following conditions:

Every competitor must obtain a patent for his invention through the company. He must first apply for a preliminary search, the cost of which will be five dollars. Should this search show his invention to be unpatentable, he can withdraw without further expense. Otherwise he will be expected to complete his application and take out a patent in the regular way. The total expense, including Government and Bureau fees, will be seventy dollars. For this, whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a patent that ought to be a valuable property to him. The prize will be awarded by a jury consisting of three reputable patent attorneys of Washington. Intending competitors should fill out the following blank, and forward it with their application:

———, 1893.

"I submit the within described invention in competition for the Twenty-five hundred Dollar Prize offered by the Press Claims Company.

NO BLANKS IN THIS COMPETITION.

This is a competition of rather an unusual nature. It is common to offer prizes for the best story, or picture, or architectural plan, all the competitors risking the loss of their labor and the successful one merely selling his for the amount of the prize. But the Press Claims Company's offer is something entirely different. Each person is asked merely to help himself, and the one who helps himself to the best advantage is to be rewarded for doing it. The prize is only a stimulus to do something that would be well worth doing without it. The architect whose competitive plan for a club house on a certain corner is not accepted has spent his labor on something of very little use to him. But the person who patents a simple and useful device in the Press Claims Company's competition need not worry if he fail to secure the prize. He has a substantial result to show for his work—one that will command its value in the market at any time.

The plain man who uses any article in his daily work ought to know better how to improve it than the mechanical expert who studies it only from the theoretical point of view. Get rid of the idea that an improvement can be too simple to be worth patenting. The simpler the better. The person who best succeeds in combining simplicity and popularity will get the Press Claims Company's twenty-five hundred dollars.

The responsibility of this company may be judged from the fact that its stock is held by about three hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

CLINTON vs. TECUMSEH.

Clinton Defeated the Third Time.

The ball game between Clinton and the Association, which was to have been played a week ago Saturday, but was postponed on account of the rain, came off last Saturday. The game was called with Tecumseh at the bat but they failed to score. For Clinton Schofield got first on balls, stole second and came home on a passed ball, Dixon understanding that but one base should be made on a passed ball, by agreement, making no special effort to secure the ball and stop the runner on third. Clinton claimed that no such agreement had been entered into and held the score, later developments showing that they needed it badly. Wade was hit by a pitched ball and, following Schofield's tactics, scored on a wild pitch by King.

In the second Day scored for Tecumseh, making the score 1 and 2 in Clinton's favor, but from this time on the Association had a walk-away, not allowing a single Clinton man to see second base. The Association scored three in the third, two in the fourth, seven in the sixth and one in the ninth.

Summary: Struck out by Kennedy 3, by King 14. Hits on Kennedy 12, on King 3. Clinton had 2 runs, 3 base hits and 10 errors; Tecumseh 14 runs, 11 base hits, one 2-base hit, 1 sacrifice hit and no errors.

A NEW LECTURE SCHEME.

The latest plan devised by Chautauqua consists in sending lectures, syllabuses and all other materials to such centers as desire local lectures but are as yet unable to afford the expense of a lecturer. The Chautauqua extension lectures are arranged in courses of six lectures each and are furnished in printed or mimeographed form. Local ministers, school teachers and others are secured to read them and questions for discussion at the close of each lecture are suggested in the syllabus, a copy of which is given to every ticket holder. Nearly seventy courses were given last winter with only one set of lectures, and so satisfactory were the results that five courses are now offered.

The new plan of read lectures devised by the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle includes five valuable courses in the following lines: Social Science, by Prof. A. W. Small, Head Professor of Sociology in the University of Chicago, a course treating of many of the pressing social questions of the times; Prophecies concerning the Fall of Jerusalem, by Dr. William R. Harper, the well known Biblical specialist; Mediaeval History and Art, by Prof. Wm. H. Goodyear, of the Brooklyn Institute, this course accompanied by an illustrated syllabus; The Poetry and teaching of Robert Browning, and Greek Social Life by professor Owen Seaman, a graduate of Cambridge, England. Communities which cannot afford the expense of a lecturer are particularly fortunate to be able to secure such courses without financial risk.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

IN HYMEN'S BONDS.

October is considered, par excellence, the month of weddings, and Tecumseh is "keeping her record true" in this line of social events. A happy and congenial company of about fifty guests assembled at the residence of David Jones on Thursday evening, Oct. 5th, to witness the marriage of his daughter Minnie to Mr. Ellsworth W. Cairns. The parlor was neatly decorated with flowers and potted plants, and the bridal gifts, of which there was a large assortment, were numerous and costly. Most of them were of the useful order, such as table ware and furniture, thus testifying to the good sense as well as the good will of the donors.

Promptly at seven o'clock the bride and groom were ushered into the parlor and the Rev. C. M. Brown, in a few impressive sentences, pronounced the words which made the twain one. Congratulations followed and the heartiness of their character showed that they were more than a mere formality. The tables were then spread and a fine wedding supper was served, to which all did ample justice. The remainder of the evening was passed in social chat, in which all, both old and young, participated. The entire affair was a cozy, home-like wedding, without pomp and undue ceremony, but with happiness reigning supreme, which is destined to be a harbinger of future connubial joys.

The happy pair left on the evening Lake Shore train for Chicago, where they will spend a brief honeymoon and then return to Tecumseh for their permanent residence. The bride has always lived in Tecumseh and the groom in Tecumseh or adjoining towns. The bride has been for several years a teacher in our public schools, and both have hosts of warm friends who will extend their heartiest congratulations and best wishes to the bridal couple as they set out on life's journey. And among these friends the HERALD wishes to be enrolled.

Meyer, Waverly, N. Y.

When the hair begins to come out in combing it shows a weakness of the scalp that calls for immediate attention. The best preparation to arrest further loss of hair and restore the scalp to a healthy condition is Ayer's Hair Vigor.

When catarrh attacks a person of scrofulous diathesis the disease is almost sure to become chronic. The only efficacious cure, therefore, is Ayer's Sorsaparilla, which expels scrofula from the system and the catarrh soon follows suit. Local treatment is only a waste of time.

is an arbitrary word used to designate the only bow (ring) which cannot be pulled off the watch.

Here's the idea

The bow has a groove on each end. A collet runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

It positively prevents the loss of the watch by theft, and avoids injury to it from dropping.

IT CAN ONLY BE HAD with Jas. Boss Filled or other watch cases bearing this trade mark.

All watch dealers sell them without extra cost. Ask your jeweler for pamphlet, or send to the manufacturers.

COLD DAYS DO NOT LESSEN THE INTEREST AT THE FAIR.

The Celebration of Spain and Italy—Enterprise In Sweden—New Matters of Interest—Things to Make a Bibliophile's Mouth Water—The Art Palace.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 6.—[Special.]—Spain and Italy are now actively exerting themselves to make their day, a week hence, worthy of their places in the fair, which are indeed good ones. As a matter of fact, it is rather the Italian societies which are to celebrate than Italy proper, and their performance will last over the 13th. Chicago, being cosmopolitan, has many Italians, and their pride is excited by the recent big days; but Italy has no special building on the grounds. That of Spain fronts the lake at the east end of the foreign group and is a very quaint structure [illegible] with square turrets on all sides rising from the upper wall, an imitation of the half fort, half convent, common in the time of Columbus. And it is as odd internally as externally.

Art and History.

Save a few curios, all the exhibits there are pictures, and the most noted Spanish paintings in the Art palace are represented by prints, with directions as to where they may be found and what they mean. Some of the titles, if translated literally, would sound odd to American ears not accustomed to hearing such liberties taken with religious subjects.

In the Art palace Spain is represented by 27 pieces of sculpture, 133 oil paintings, a few minor pictures, and, what is remarkable, 13 architectural designs. I say remarkable because Spain is not generally taken as a land where architecture is cultivated to a high degree at present, and because every one of the exhibits in that line is interesting. Among them are designs for triumphal arches and theater entrances, church doors, legislative buildings and monuments and reproductions of striking features of ancient temples. Of course Italy has a very much greater display in art than Spain, having 174 statues, 110 fine bronzes, 188 oil paintings and many minor pictures. Equally, of course, artistic taste will figure largely in the display of both nations on their days.

Manhattan day being set for the 21st, there is lively buzzing among the natives of New York city who live in Chicago, but have not lived here long enough to lose their affection for Manhattan. Of course we shall have all the historic scenes reproduced—the Half Moon of 1609 and her Dutch crew steering for the Battery, the burghers of 1620 and later, the ancestors of the Four Hundred, old Peter Stuyvesant and all the rest.

The Manhattanese of Chicago included in their address to those left behind a rather pointed hint that New York had been "cold nose on this thing from the start of the hunt," and in reply a prominent New Yorker frankly admitted there had been things said to create such a suspicion, but now it was all to be done away with. And as very low fares are secured, New York will doubtless boom on the 21st.

Signs of the Approaching End.

Despite the large attendance and general hope that it is to continue, one can see many signs of that restlessness which indicates that exhibitors are getting ready to move. Many of the far foreign peoples want to go now, and the physicians on the plaisance bluntly declare that if the Dahomeyans and Bedouins do not go pretty soon many of them never will. The darkies in particular do not seem to know how to take care of themselves, and look very miserable. The Samoans are not much better, and even the ostriches show very plainly that they are out of their natural climate and do not enjoy the change.

Last, but very far from least, Ohio, Iowa, Indiana and the Odd Fellows brought such immense crowds on their days, and so increased the general attendance on other days, that the directors will on Chicago day pay the last dollar of indebtedness, bonded or otherwise, and if the attendance holds up thereafter the stockholders will rejoice greatly, for all the profits are theirs. They now figure on $2,000,000 to divide, but this would require admissions averaging 180,000 a day or thereabouts to the very last.

The Swedes of Chicago are making extraordinary efforts to outdo any other foreigners on Chicago day, and those who have seen their floats tell me they will present the entire outline of Norse mythology and early history on a new plan and in a style of unparalleled brilliancy. As the march will be so arranged that 600,000 people can see it, nobody need stay away on account of the crowd.

Some Newly Discovered Beauties.

The statement that one might stay here through the fair and discover a startling novelty every day is something of a chestnut, but I cannot forbear brief description of a few new things I have found, chiefly in bookbinding and historic art. The display in bookbinding is to some extent historic, but it strikes me as very strange that the art should have made such rapid progress at the start. Possibly it was because the old time manuscripts were often beautifully bound, and so binding did not have to improve by slow degrees after the invention of printing, as the latter art did. I am almost persuaded that the prettiest books still are those made up soon after printing began and while the old illuminated letters and quaintly pictured margins were still preserved. Some of these are enameled covers with a jeweled corners.

The collection here shows that the Germans first tried to make cheap books by binding them in pigskin with great bronze clasps and hinges. Within the first generation after printing was introduced into France the bindings were magnificent, but there is nothing to indicate that cheap books were called for or needed, as the books were bound chiefly for the rich and noble. It also appears that the fashion in binding was influenced by the government at the time, being very gay and ornamented in the times of Henry IV and Louis XIII, but heavy and somber—in fact, severe—in that of Louis XIV. In the Bonaventure collection in the Liberal Arts the whole series is brought down to date, and there we see that fine books are now bound in a style to harmonize with their contents—love, history and philosophy distinguished by their covers. It makes a bookish man's mouth water to look over them.

Another place in which the lover of history and student of evolution might pass days of study and pleasure is gallery No. 4 in the Art palace, where the old American paintings are arranged in the order of their dates. There is the original of Washington, by Gilbert Stuart, and several medallion portraits of him by less noted artists. The first picture of Washington ever painted, that by Charles Wilson Peale, is in the Mount Vernon building, and despite its impressiveness it makes one smile at first view, for our first president is in the uniform of a British colonial colonel and looks the character to perfection.

A COLD, STONY STARE.

WHY THEY DO NOT SPEAK AS THEY PASS BY.

The Trouble Between Eloquent Bourke Cockran and Reliable Richard Croker. Uncle Sam Is Short of Ready Money. The Behring Sea Case.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6.—[Special.]—Considerable interest is taken here in the Democratic state convention of New York. Much comment is heard upon the fact that for the first time since his appearance in politics Bourke Cockran is not a delegate to the state convention. Heretofore he has always been one of the conspicuous representatives and the spokesman of Tammany Hall, as he was at the national convention last year at Chicago. Today Mr. Cockran is in Washington, apparently with no interest in the state convention of his party. An interesting story lies behind his absence. Mr. Cockran and Boss Croker of Tammany Hall have not made up their quarrel. For months they have not spoken. Efforts have been made to secure reconciliation, but without avail.

Croker and Cockran quarreled last winter over the senatorship. Cockran was ambitious to become senator from New York and thought Croker owed it to him for his services to Tammany Hall to lend him the powerful support of Tammany, but Mr. Croker had already given his pledge to his friend Murphy and refused to withdraw it. Even if he had been willing to throw Murphy overboard, he would not have taken up Cockran, for it is well known here that Croker wanted to make W. C. Whitney senator from New York. Mr. Whitney was not averse to this honor and would indeed have been glad could circumstances have been so shaped as to give it to him. If Murphy had not had Mr. Croker's promise, Whitney would have been the man, but with Croker his word is as good as his bond. He stuck to Murphy, and Murphy was elected.

Cockran never forgave Croker for this, and the eloquent son of Tammany is no longer in sympathy with the leader of that great organization. In the gossip of Washington we hear that Mr. Whitney is the coming leader of New York politics; that Senator Hill is gradually to be brushed aside, and that with the friendship of Croker and Tammany Hall and Boss McLaughlin of Brooklyn, Whitney's control and probable candidacy for the presidency are to be undisputed. While the Democrats are holding their convention in New York, there is a good deal of this sort of talk in Washington concerning the past and the future of men and politics in the Empire State.

Uncle Sam Is Hard Up.

Strange stories are heard in Washington concerning the condition of the United States treasury. While the facts do not come out in official statements, it is nevertheless true that Uncle Sam is dreadfully hard up. By dint of good management Secretary Carlisle manages to pay bills and salaries and also to maintain the gold reserve at something like $100,000,000. But the daily balance of available funds is now so small that there is constant fear it will be wholly wiped out, and that the treasury will be virtually insolvent. Of course the gold reserve can at any time be drawn upon, for there is no law to prevent, but the tradition of the department and the demands of public confidence are all against this action.

It is said, furthermore, on good authority, that the gold balance of ninety odd millions dollars is made up to some extent of gold certificates and other money which is not actually gold, and which, under strict construction, has no place in that fund. There are men who go so far as to say that if the actual condition of the treasury were known something like a panic would ensue. It is noticed that whenever a Populist senator or representative introduces a resolution in congress for the purpose of eliciting information as to the precise condition of the treasury, great pressure is at once brought to bear to suppress it. The men who do this have in mind the public good and no small or mean motive.

The Treasury Needs Help.

Uncle Sam is getting along these days upon an economical basis. He is saving every dollar that can possibly be saved on his expense account, and the supervising architect, who has charge of the erection of public buildings, is purposely slow in the work of preparing plans and specifications in order to defer the expenditure of money. Something must be done speedily to relieve the treasury of its stress, and inasmuch as the new tariff bill cannot go into effect for nine months or a year it is believed in some quarters that it will be necessary to issue bonds in order to increase the gold reserve or the amount of available funds.

A race between economy and disaster is now in progress in this city. Congress has decided that a new government printing office shall be built, as the old building is known to be insecure and rickety. More than 2,000 men and women are employed in this great printing office, and there is much fear that we shall have there a repetition of the disaster at Ford's theater, which cost a score of lives. The printing office is full of heavy machinery and materials, and no one would be surprised at any time to hear that the walls had fallen in and buried hundreds of the occupants in the debris. The government is so hard pressed for money that delays in the selection of site and the erection of the new building are necessary, and it is feared the race between economy and impending disaster may be won by the latter.

Our Parsimony at Paris.

A curious and unpleasant instance of economy under the United States government system was afforded a few months ago at Paris. The court of arbitration in the Behring sea case sat for several months, and by order of the court the proceedings were taken down stenographically and copies thereof given to the British and American representatives. When the decision of the court was handed down and the great case came to an end, the bill for stenography and typewriting amounted to several thousand dollars. The question was as to who should pay this bill. The British representatives promptly offered to pay their half, supposing, of course, that the United States would pay their half. But the representatives of our government demurred, said they had no funds and declined to put up their share. The court was appealed to for an order compelling the United States to pay, but the members of the court decided that it had no jurisdiction in such a case. The result was that Great Britain paid the whole bill, making an exceedingly wry face while so doing, and not being able to express in language which would be parliamentary her opinion of the parsimony of our Uncle Sam.

Among the rare eggs of birds still living that of the blue red winged grosbeak is probably the most valuable, a well marked set being worth anywhere between $1,500 and $2,000.

BIG FORGERIES.

S. J. De France Is Now Under Arrest in Detroit.

In St. Paul and Minneapolis, He Is Said to Have Raised $38,000 on Fraudulent Drafts—Will Be Sent to Minnesota.

A FORGER CAPTURED.

DETROIT, Oct. 6.—The mystery surrounding the arrest of Stonewall J. De France was somewhat cleared up today by a requisition from the governor of Minnesota for his return to that state. The original warrant was issued by the municipal court of St. Paul, charging forgery in the second degree. In the official papers Arthur C. Anderson, cashier of the St. Paul national bank, charges that on April 11, 1891, Stonewall J. De France, alias Cameron Elliott, appeared at the bank and presented a draft for $35,000. This purported to be drawn by the Bank of Commerce of Indianapolis, payable to the order of Cameron Elliott. It was drawn on the United States national bank of New York. The draft was accepted, credited to Cameron Elliott, and before the maker had a chance to protest Elliott had drawn $19,000 and disappeared.

Gov. Rich immediately honored the requisition and issued a warrant for the return of De France to Minnesota. Frank W. Kinney, a Minnesota officer, returned from Lansing with the warrant this afternoon. De France's attorneys will endeavor to secure his release on a writ of habeas corpus. It is claimed that De France, under the assumed name of Cameron Elliott, appeared in St. Paul and Minneapolis in March, 1892. He produced letters of introduction from prominent Chicago bankers and made small deposits in the St. Paul national bank of St. Paul and the Flour City national bank of Minneapolis in the shape of drafts drawn by the Bank of Commerce of Indianapolis. He ingratiated himself into the good favor of the bank officials, and April 11 cashed the alleged forged checks. It is said that he got $19,000 from the St. Paul national bank and a like amount from the Flour City national bank of Minneapolis. After securing the money De France came directly back to Detroit, got his family, and went to Europe for an extended tour. It is now believed by Detroit officials that the St. Paul and Minneapolis bank swindles are only two of many such which he has perpetrated in various parts of the country.

DYNAMITE IN THE HAY.

About Ten Pounds of It Found in a Stable Loft at Monroe.

MONROE, Oct. 4.—When one of the men at Foster's livery stable went to the hayloft this evening to feed his horses he dug out of the hay a large black satchel. He carried his find downstairs, and those who gathered around to investigate its contents were nearly paralyzed with fear when, on opening the satchel, out rolled twenty sticks of dynamite, aggregating about ten pounds of the terrible stuff, a quantity of fuse, caps, matches and everything necessary to its most approved and destructive use.

There is considerable speculation as to how the satchel got there, some inclining to the opinion that it was left there by some telephone linemen several months ago, while others shake their heads, and all turn pale at the thought of the awful destruction an explosion would have wrought, the stable being in the heart of the city.

RECEIVER WANTED.

For the Michigan Mutual Live Stock Insurance Company.

LANSING, Oct. 4.—Attorney General Ellis will apply to the circuit court of Wexford county for the appointment of a receiver to wind up the affairs of the Michigan Mutual Live Stock Insurance company of Cadillac. Insurance Commissioner Giddings recently investigated the affairs of the company and found the following facts, which are admitted by the secretary:

Cash on hand, nothing; on assessment made for February, March and April, 50 per cent. unpaid; assessment for June, July and August, 65 per cent. unpaid; assessment for August and September, 80 per cent. unpaid; notes practically worthless, $1,324.80. Several unpaid losses due January 1, and aggregating $1,060; resisted claims to the amount of $1,202, and other claims, making a total of $2,490, constitute most of its liabilities. This is the second Michigan mutual live stock insurance company which has gone to the wall within the year.

Two Theories.

STANTON, Oct. 4.—Two theories are advanced for the attempted suicide of Rev. C. B. Rowell at this place. One is that he brooded over dissensions in his congregation, the other that he was in love. The Beulah referred to in the note he left is a girl whom he has shown more or less attention. It is hardly possible Mr. Rowell may recover.

Died of Tobacco Cancer.

BAY CITY, Oct. 4.—William Benner, tarnkey at the county jail under ex-Sheriff Marsac, died of a tobacco cancer of the throat at his boarding place on Marsac street, aged 47 years. He had no relatives in this country. Being a member of Arion society, its members attended his funeral in a body.

THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA.

In connection with the foregoing report of our Ornithological Chapter, it is only right to call the attention of all lovers of birds to the magnificent work now being issued by the Natural Science Association of America, and entitled "The Birds of North America." Edition limited to 1,000. It is emphatically an original work, original in design and execution, and whether in letter press, illustrations or price, it is unapproached by anything of the kind in existance. It is recommended by the highest scientific, ecclesiastic and educational authority as being the most attractive, meritorious, pure and ennobling exportion of our ornithology yet given to the public. Dr. Elliott Coues, author of "Birds of the North-West," says: "It is a really notable work." Prof. C. J. Maynard, author of the "Birds of Eastern North America," says: "It contains the best pictures of the species which I have ever seen." Thos. G. Gentry, author of "Life Histories of Birds," and "Nests and Eggs of Birds of the United States," says: "It is the cheapest and best publication on ornithology in this country. The drawings are of a very high order, and rivals in beauty of design and finish the more costly works published abroad or in this country. It should be found in our homes and in libraries generally." And, according to Dr. Theodore Gill, a member of the National Academy of Sciences, "It is not only a meritorious volume, but is altogether so handsome as to make it a very appropriate presentation book or ornament for the family table." It is an imperial quarto volume of engraved figures of all our species, artistically reproduced, true in all hues of color to their natural plumage and botanical surroundings. It also includes a copious text description of their habits and characteristics, and embracing in general the observations made by the most eminent writers on ornithology, and a systematic table, arranged according to the classification adopted by the American Ornithologists' Union, includes all the additions and corrections of our North American species which have been made to date, with an index to page, plate and figure of each species according to the A. O. U. number. It is illustrated with one hundred and nineteen full page colored plates, each representing from one to thirty or more species. It is the finest book on American birds issued since Audubon, and is pronounced by some authorities surperior to that now rare and costly work. It is issued in half and full bindings, Russia, seal, or morocco, at the net price of $40 and $45 respectively; but in response to a special letter, the association authorized me to say that a substantial discount will be made to such of our A. A. members and others as are working naturalists. We commend this work especially to members of the Wilson Ornithological Chapter. It is also a very useful and appropriate addition to the home and reference library, and for presentation purposes generally. Address regarding it, the Natural Science Association, 144 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Sample of plates and text can be had by sending twenty-five cents in postage stamps.

"Has any other girl ever worn this ring?"

Shoes to Fit.

The funny man's wife was reading an English almanac and he was smoking and resting his gigantic intellect on the back of his chair.

"I notice here," she said, "that in the matter of shoes, temperance people should wear pumps. Now, what sort of shoes would you say drinking people should wear?"

The gigantic intellect began to roll over and exert itself.

"Well," he said, thoughtfully, "I think they should wear tight ones."—Detroit Free Press.

Hard Work.

Johnnie—Mamma, are twins doubles or halves?

Mamma—Why, doubles, of course, darling. Aren't you and your brother Tom two whole dear boys? You are not half boys. Haven't you two round curly heads?

Johnnie—Well, we may be doubles on heads, but we're halves on apples.—Harper's Young People.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

TRADE MARK. DR. A. OWEN.

MOUNT PLEASANT, MICH., August 15, 1892.

THE OWEN ELECTRIC BELT AND APPLIANCE CO.:

Dear Sirs:—I now am able to say, after having purchased one of your No. 4 Electric Belts with Spinal Appliance about one year ago, that I thank God I have found relief from my terrible suffering through the wonderful healing influence of your wonderful Body Belt. August 29, 1891, at which time I was a great sufferer, and had been for more than four years, from extreme nervous prostration, so much so that, on the least excitement, my whole nervous system would be all of a tremble from head to foot, and unable to control myself in the least, and would affect me to tears like a little child. I am a farmer by profession; in the fields, or at work on the farm, or at any excitement, it had the same effect. I could not lift the weight of five pounds. It so continued with increased suffering, until I was unable to help myself, and for eight long months my suffering was intense. My stomach was so weak that I could not take any food but crackers and warm water for the above time. My kidneys were so weak that I could not retain my urine. It would pass from me involuntarily, and I was under the necessity of leaving my couch from six to eight times of a night to void my urine, which was very painful. I was also troubled with severe constipation and piles, so that I was obliged to use injections to produce evacuations of the bowels. It was very distressing, so much so that I had to be lifted in and out of my bed for several months. The doctors could do me no good whatever, and I had made up my mind that there was no help for me this side of the grave. My limbs would become numb and cold, seemingly as ice, and I would try with hot bricks, rubbing and all other methods to restore the circulation and natural feeling, but all to no effect, and then it would pass off. Then again another attack would occur which would leave me helpless, and so continued periodically, and I could get no relief. The doctors told me that I must not do any work, and that it would be three years at least before I would be able to work. I agreed with them, for I could not, nor did I ever expect to again. The whole world seemed to me a blank, and my vital forces all had left me, and my life was fast ebbing away from me through the loss of my life fluids, which doctors were unable even to check. I had given up all hope of ever getting help, and death in all its terrible forms stared me in the face, from which there seemed to be no avenue of escape from this living horror, of which no living person is able to know or feel, except his sufferings be as mine has been. In this state of suffering and agony I continued until about one year ago now I met a friend who, on seeing my helpless condition, advised me to try one of the Owen Electric Belts. For several weeks I doubted his statements about what he told me of the wonderful healing properties of it, but he was so earnest and persistent that finally consented to send for one. He advised me to send for a No. 4 with spinal appliance, which I did, at a cost of $30.00, which is your price for No. 4 and spinal appliance. I will say here that it is the best $30.00 investment that I ever made in my life in the way of doctor's remedies or anything else, as I had spent dollars up into the hundreds, but could get no relief whatever. As soon as I received the Belt and Appliance, I had it charged and adjusted and put it on, and in a short time after putting it on I began to feel wonderful soothing and gentle currents of its healing power passing all through me, clear to the end of my toes and fingers, a prickling sensation like thousands of needles. Many were the sleepless nights I had passed unable to sleep but from one to two hours through the whole night for months. On the third night after wearing the Belt I slept until morning and awoke greatly refreshed. I was not disturbed, nor had I to void my urine once through the night, and I have not been bothered in that way since. All the drains upon the system have ceased, and constipation and piles all have left me as if by magic. My nervousness regained their former strength, my eyesight, mind have become clear, and I have gained in weight about 15 pounds, and I feel like a new man. My stomach has got back its power of digestion, and I can eat almost any kind of food that my appetite craves, without pain or distress. I am gaining daily and I feel better and weigh more than I have for the past ten years, and it seems I have a new lease of life. I cannot say enough in favor of your wonderful Electric Body Belt. It is far superior to all medicines compounded for the relief and cure of chronic and complicated diseases and broken down constitutions. I would not take $2,000 for my Belt if I could not get another like it. There is nothing like it for relief and cure where all other remedies fail. I can not praise your Belt enough, for what it has done for me words cannot express. I will say here that I recommend the Owen Electric Belt to all suffering humanity who fail to find relief from other remedies. It is the messenger of quick relief and certain cure of all nervous debility and other nerve troubles. I know it will cure all diseases which you advertise it to cure.

This you may publish to let suffering humanity know there is relief and cure to be found in your wonderful Belt and Appliances.

The following resolutions on the death of Mrs. Albert Eaton, were adopted at a meeting of the W. C. T. U., held October 4, 1893.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Joe and Hugh Campbell were visiting their father in this place over Sunday. The old gentleman is very feeble and not expected to stand the winter through.

Cards are out for the wedding of Louis G. Wright and Amanda Sanburn of this place. We congratulate Mr. Weight on his choice of a bride, and wish the couple all the happiness this world and the next can afford.

Last Friday several of the farmers living in the township of Ridgeway, "made a bee" and graveled a poor piece of the road leading east from Holloway, being the extrem east end of that road lying in Raisin township.

The ball game last Saturday was, considering the fizzley weather, rather a fizzle, and we hope it has not fizzled altogether, as we wish to show Raisin Centers' how we can play. We are not bragging ourselves as experts however.

Last Saturday morning, while the wind round about us, was creating such sad havoc, Herbert Pease drove into town and alighting in front of the blacksmith shop, unhitched, led his horse into the shop, leaving his buggy with the top up and back to the wind; he had hardly got his back turned before the buggy, propelled by the force wind, shot out into and down the road, but was gallantly rescued by Len Carpenter before any damage occurred.

Last Sunday while repairing a breach made in the fence, by some swine, Jos. Billmeyer was severely cut upon the foot by an axe. He was driving a stake by means of the axe when the bit struck a projecting picket and swerved from its course. The wound is just back of the toes on his right foot, the big toe being severed and the bone of the foot exposed. Dr. Nixon dressed the wound. Mr. Billmeyer walked to the house after cutting his foot and, when he had taken off his shoe his toe dropped down as if on a hinge. He sent his hired man out to get a piece of basswood, and then went into his shop and made a sort of sandal to wear on the bottom of his foot, shaping it to the foot, to hold the toe in place. He would not allow the Dr. to take any stitches but closed the wounds by means of sticking plaster.

Last Sunday evening, about 9 o'clock, Mrs. Ann Kelley, widow of the late Wm. Kelley, fell down stairs at her son Verne's and was killed. The particulars as near as we have been able to learn are: Mrs. Kelley and her daughter Dora had started to retire for the night and after entering their room, Mrs. Kelley started to go to a closet or clothes press at the head of the stairs to get their week day clothing to put on Monday morning, without taking a light supposing she was familiar enough with the surroundings. PENTECOST POINTERS.

Mrs. Chas. Hendryx is on the sick list.

An item in last weeks "Pointers," should have read Harrison G. instead of Henry C. Daniels, auction, etc.

Smith German has a handsome, new antique oak secretary and bookcase combined. It is from F. R. Stebbins' Sons, Adrian, and is a beauty.

The young man who sold frozen onions to several unwary house keepers in this vicinity, will not meet with very good success next year, probably.

Allison Cooley lost a valuable horse last Friday. Mr. Cooley seems to have more than his share of misfortune, as he had four fine fat swine made into mince meat by a passing railroad train, last week.

Little Iva Pitcher is quite sick, at the residence of her uncle, B. F. Clement, where she has been visiting with her parents, who reside in Kansas. Later: little Iva died at the home of her uncle, Tuesday night.

E. L. German and wife, and Leon Love and sisters Lulu and Nora, returned last Monday, from a visit to the World's Fair, bringing with them several pretty souvenirs of a pleasant trip.

Another Pentecost poultry house, has suffered a raid from the chicken thieves. We are afraid, there will not be enough poultry left to celebrate Thanksgiving, properly, if these light fingered gentry keep on.

Bedlam seems let loose in the way of stealing. Last week a granary was broken into and a large quantity of wheat taken. A celler was also entered and a barrel of pork stolen. No arrests so far as we know.

Can "the oldest inhabitant" remember of seeing so much wheat sown in October. During a drive of twenty-four miles, last Friday we saw a large amount of land being prepared for sowing, yet this month.

A carload of swarthy looking foreigners were shipped from Ohio into Michigan, last week who separated into squads of two or more, and went tramping through the country, filthy, tawny, bare headed, queer looking creatures, both men and women selling a few pins, needles, combs, etc. Two "delegations" passed through here, enquiring the way to Homer, Mich.; one showed an envelope with the unpronounceable name of "Rizk Bsharah" written on it when asked her name. Some one remarkable that the name was Hebrew and that they looked like Hebrews. "Heathen you mean" said a bystander, and that was pretty near the truth.

MACON MUSIC.

THE FARM HOME READING CIRCLE.

Of the Michigan Agricultural College, for Promoting Agriculture and Kindred Pursuits.

In December, 1892, the factulty of the Michigan Agricultural College appointed a committee to prepare a course of reading especially adapted to the requirements of farmers, gardeners, fruit growers, stock breeders, etc. The course was outlined and circulars issued. So many expressions of appreciation have been received that the managers have been encouraged to carefully revise the course and take steps to widen its scope and increase its influence. The State Board of Agriculture have made provision for the printing, correspondeuce, postage, etc., connected with the course so that the only expense to members is books.

The primary object of the F. H. R. C. is to promote agriculture and kindred pursuits. The circle offers a systematic course of reading. It furnishes books through the secretary at greatly reduced prices. It acts in a limited manner, as a bureau of information on agricultural subjects. All cannot enjoy a course at the Agricultural College, but no one is so situated that he cannot cultivate habits of observation and study. The aim has been to supply a course which shall furnish practical information and assist those who desire to secure some knowledge of science as applied to agriculture. It is believed there are many to embrace the opportunities offered by such a course.

The course is not limited as to age or occupation. All persons interested are invited to join. Old and young, fathers and mothers, boys and girls, send in your applications. Farmers' boys and girls are especially urged to undertake systematic reading. You are surrounded by a great laboratory. The fields, gardens, orchards and meadows are your class rooms. Interest your fathers and mothers. Ask questions. If you are unable to find an answer by consulting the index of your book, write to the secretary and he will refer it to the proper authority. No one is too old to join the circle. Let us all undertake the regular thoughtful reading of good books, in place of the aimless, careless reading of newspapers.

While it is recommended that grange patron's lodges, alliances and other farmers' organizations form circles for reading and discussion, yet the great value of the course will manifest itself to those so situated that reading in circles would be impossible. As the name implies, it is a "Farm Home Reading Circle." Do not let the coming winter season pass without taking up the work in one or more of the classes

Five classes are offered: Soils and Crops, Live Stock, Garden and Orchard, Home Making, and Political Science. These classes were outlined by men prominent in their special lines, and, so far as it is possible, are arranged progressively. It is urged that the course be taken up, as recommended, and finished. However, if for any reason books further along in the course are desired, they may be ordered and credit will be given for their completion. No requirement is made as to the order in which classes shall be taken up.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a coustitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

AMONG THE HOPEFUL

VISITORS TO THE FAIR HAVE QUIT TALKING ABOUT HARD TIMES.

Spicy Remarks of the Freethinkers—Utah's Exhibit In Literature—A Kansas Man Frees His Mind—A Lack of Snow In Dakota—Inspiring Figures.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—When the parliament of religions closed, we naturally expected a few comments, some criticism and then a lull, but it looks just now as if it were to be the great theme of discussion for the winter. First the missionaries gave it a whack, then the evolutionists—whose congress followed—treated it with the dry sarcasm of science, and finally the freethinkers fell on it with cantankerous fury. Having been refused a hall in the Art institute, they met at 517 West Madison street, and when I called there for a bill of particulars I was surprised to find how many of them were old acquaintances. Their presiding officer, Judge C. B. Waite, was long ago a sort of colaborer with us in Utah, and he gave me his statement with extra judicial vigor. I will not detail it, as he was heated, but the gist of it was that the managers at the Art institute had treated him and his fellow committeemen with "rank discourtesy."

He has a history, and, still more, has his wife, and part of it is old enough to be new. In the winter of 1861-2 the Mormons concluded that the United States was a failure and the Caucasian played out. So they ran Governor Dawson out of the territory and set up the theocracy again. President Lincoln therefore ordered General P. E. Connor and the California and Nevada volunteers to Salt Lake City and sent a new governor and judges, who ran the territory in the semimilitary style of those times till 1865.

One of the judges was C. B. Waite, and his wife, Caroline V. Waite, was the first Gentile woman to get right on the inside of polygamy. Her facile pen showed it up in all its dips, spurs, angles, variations and sinuosities, as the mining claims say. Now, unless a Gentile is very thoroughly rooted and grounded in his faith, three years in Utah will knock all the religion out of him, so the Waites left there not only agnostics, but with a feeling of hostility to ecclesiastical power, which is one of the unhappy effects of living under a theocracy. The judge is the author of an able and learned but rather dry work on the origin and date of the gospels and is just the man to preside over such a congress as this.

Literary Lights of Utah.

The old times in Utah being freshly called to mind, I went from the congress to the Utah building and was agreeably surprised to find what progress those people have made in art and literature. It is questionable if any other territory has produced so many really able writers, taking both Saint and Gentile, though of course many of them were born elsewhere. The poems of Sarah E. Carmichael (born and reared a Mormon) rank very high, and those of Mrs. Eliza R. Snow (a spiritual wife of Brigham Young) have merit.

The "apology," if I may call it such, of Elder Rich is as able a defense of Mormonism as can be made, and Elder C. W. Penrose has risen to real sublimity, especially in his battle hymn, which has all the fire of Julia Ward Howe's production of that title. Two of the books deserve special notice—Hollister's "Life of Colfax" and Cannon's "Life of Joseph Smith."

O. J. Hollister was born in Columbia county, N. Y., reached Colorado among the pioneers and located in Utah in 1869, where he was collector of internal revenue for many years. Having married a half sister of Vice President Colfax, he made the study of that statesman's life a labor of love, and as the work comes out after the animosities of the old era have passed away it is a dispassionate and valuable book.

George Q. Cannon was born in the isle of Man, was brought to Nauvoo in boyhood and has been intimately acquainted with every Mormon leader from Joseph Smith down, being now but one remove from the head of the church in office. His book is a curiosity and well worth the attention of one interested in religious phenomena. It is written in elegant English, and not one of the early apostles ever spoke or wrote of Jesu, with more loving enthusiasm than he writes of Joseph Smith. Penn's and Barclay's remarks on George Fox are cold criticism in comparison.

They Talk For Their States.

As for the rest, popular interest in the minor religious congresses has about ceased as they are little more than denominational conferences. In the World's fair, however, enthusiasm seems to increase as we draw near the close. I often have occasion to note the happy, joyous hopefulness for the future which nearly all visitors express, and I am a little amused to find it most ardently expressed in the Kansas state building.

"Talk about bad times for our farmers," said one Kan-an to me this morning, "it's bosh! In two-thirds of the state the crops are good, and mortgages are being paid off faster than in any other state. Fat hogs on foot 6 cents a pound right at the home depot, and that means 60 cent corn at a profit. You know how that runs—for every dollar a hundred in the hog it pays to feed corn at 10 cents—all the way up. Hay is pretty near worth its weight in silver. About those dry counties? Oh, well, that isn't a farming country out there—we don't count it. There is land enough for 8,000,000 farmers in that part of the state where rain is plenty, but new fellows from the east have to learn how to farm. Then they can raise big crops of anything, and as for stock—why, Kansas hasn't shown the tenth of what she can do, and there is always money in good stock."

I was glad to hear this man talk. He was such a pleasant contrast to those woeful fellows who talk for Kansas at some conventions. He admitted that wheat is low and good riding horses can now be bought for $40 apiece, but thought it all the better—too much wheat raised anyhow, and cheap horses are just the making of a people. "Come out, John, and ride all over Ed Funston's district (meaning the congressman) and get some sand in your craw. I'll let you have the best horse in my herd—and I've got 30—for $1 a week. They'll charge you $2 at the stables. When you've rid him a month, you won't be so pale behind the gills."

I trow not. I have ridden those Kansas horses and realized the necessity for a new edition of "Gail on abnormal developments."

More Snow, More Grain.

I also like to hear the Canadians and North Dakota people talk. They can prove that the more snow there is, and the longer it lies on, the bigger the crops will be. It sounded funny to hear Mr. Dickey, agent for North Dakota, say: "The chief drawback in our section is there isn't enough snow, and it sometimes gets too dry for good sleighing. If we could have every winter the heavy snows of upper New York, I don't know of anything that would be lacking."

MAJORITY WILL RULE

SENATOR BRICE EXPRESSES HIS VIEWS ON REPEAL.

Severe Criticism of the President—A Democratic Senator In a Complaining Mood. Why the Deliberations Have Been So Prolonged—Bad Feelings.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Among the shrewdest members of the senate is Mr. Brice of Ohio. As is well known, Mr. Brice has large financial interests in New York and intimate relations with prominent bankers and financiers. He is, moreover, a keen, practical man of business and perhaps the closest and most analytical student of human nature in the senate. He has not been playing an important part in the silver battle, being content to remain in the background and watch the proceedings. He has been for repeal all the time and more or less impatient, as every one else has been, over the long delay. In conversation with your correspondent today Senator Brice said:

"This question would have been settled long before this if there had been an actual majority for unconditional repeal well managed by competent and determined leaders. I have always contended and still say that it is possible for a majority to do anything it wishes to do in this senate. Notwithstanding the absence of rules which directly force a vote, the majority always has ruled in this body and always will rule. Some time may be necessary to accomplish its purpose, but whenever a majority sets out to secure certain legislation it will arrive at its destination in the end. The trouble in this whole matter has been that there never was a majority in the senate for unconditional repeal. There has been merely a simulated majority, and a simulated majority could never hope to accomplish anything in the face of determined opposition.

"When the senate met last August, there was a majority against repeal, but in the course of two or three weeks this was changed to a nominal majority in favor of repeal. But these changes were only of classification and not of the heart. From first to last fully one-third of the men who have been classed for repeal have not actually been in favor of it and were only too glad to escape the responsibility of meeting the issue or facing a vote. These men in the nature of things have indulged in more or less talk of compromise and have, intentionally or unintentionally, given comfort and moral support to the opposition.

"Under such circumstances the minority had a perfect right to consume as much time as possible in what seemed to be legitimate debate, waiting for conditions to change or for some accident that would give them either a total or a partial victory. That is just what has happened, and it is precisely what was foreseen many weeks ago by men who understood the situation. The country has been largely fooled by the claims and predictions of people who ought to have known better and who should not have permitted themselves to be instruments of deception."

President Cleveland's Mistake.

Senator Brice is not the only man who has perceived the true inwardness of the senate situation. It was another senator, who does not care to have his name printed, who said to your correspondent:

"Mr. Cleveland made a great mistake when he failed to call congress together last spring. If we had met last April or May, our session would have carried us into the very center of the financial storm, and had we been considering the repeal bill in June and July no power on earth could have prevented us from passing it. There is no longer a panic in the country. While times are hard, while liquidation is going on and there is a great deal of grinding and friction in the commercial and financial world, the panicky feeling has wholly disappeared.

"Last summer we would have repealed the purchase clause of the Sherman law without much delay and for the purpose of affording the country temporary relief. Now it is not temporary relief that the country wants. It is a permanent financial policy, not for a month or two, but for a series of years. To fix upon and put in the statute books a permanent financial policy for a country like ours is too important a task to be hastily undertaken or to be accomplished under pressure. These are the thoughts that have been going through the minds of senators, and these are the reasons why they have paused to deliberate even while many newspapers were vociferously demanding immediate action and reviling the senate as impotent and imbecile because it did not act speedily.

"It is the opinion of the most conservative senators that unconditional repeal of the Sherman law would leave a state of feeling both in the house and senate that would prevent any other legislation on the currency for years to come. The sore would be so deep and long that it could not be reopened. Therefore the best thing to do is to settle the whole thing at once. While we are at it, it would be better not only to repeal or amend the Sherman law, but provide for a gold reserve and other means of maintaining public confidence in the future."

A Democratic Senator on the President.

A senator who has given close attention to the inner workings of the repeal battle tells your correspondent that a large source of trouble throughout the session has been the lack of understanding between the president and leading members of the senate. According to this senator, there has been considerable irritation over the attempt of the president to dictate to congress what it should do, but more irritation over the fact that after attempting such interference the president has failed to discuss matters with senators and has left them more or less in the dark as to what was objected to them.

This senator declares that Mr. Cleveland is so constituted he cannot discuss a matter with any one who does not agree with him. Whereas two ordinary men can sit down together, and though not agreeing are able to talk and gain mutual benefit and light, such a procedure is impossible with the president. If a man does not agree with him, there can be no conversation. The whole talk comes to an end as soon as the disagreement appears. The senator who is responsible for this analysis of Mr. Cleveland speaks from personal knowledge.

He adds that if the president had possessed the quality of frankness and of easy, comfortable conversation it would have been a small matter to call senators into consultation and reach an adjustment of all differences satisfactory in the main to both sides. But the president has not done this and has made two or three senators the instruments of his communication to the remainder. This is not a satisfactory method and has not worked well in this instance. The senators who make these criticisms upon Mr. Cleveland's conduct are Democrats, and prominent ones at that; therefore, if they are mistaken, the responsibility is theirs and not mine.

SIX DROWNED.

Terrible Disaster off Starke on Lake Michigan.

The Schooner Minnehaha Is Wrecked and Six of Her Crew Drowned—The Captain Saves His Life by Swimming to the Shore.

VICTIMS OF THE STORM.

MANISTEE, Oct. 15.—The big schooner Minnehaha was beached at Starke, 20½ miles north of here, at noon Saturday to save it from foundering in deep water. The seas soon overwhelmed the wreck and drove the crew into the rigging. Before the arrival of the life-saving crews from this place and Frankfort the schooner went to pieces. But one person, Capt. William Packer, was saved. The crew of six persons were drowned. The life-saving crew at this point worked hard to rescue the unfortunate sailors, but could not. Capt. Packer jumped overboard and swam ashore.

[The lost schooner Minnehaha was owned by H. J. Johnson and others, of Cleveland, and was valued at $25,000. It was insured for $18,000 with the Commercial Union, North America, the London Assurance and one other company. It was built in 1880 and was unfortunate from the start. Two years ago it was wrecked near Detour and remained on the rocks all winter, being abandoned to the underwriters, who finally rescued the wreck and sold it.]

BAY CITY, Oct. 15.—The large lake tug Acme, formerly named the Music, owned by the Michigan Log Towing company, of this port, foundered 25 miles off Sturgeon Point, Lake Huron, Saturday afternoon. She was towing a raft, in company with the tug Reliance, which saved the crew and ran to East Tawas. The raft belonged to the Holland-Emery company of East Tawas, and was lost in the lake. The Acme was valued at $25,000 and was insured for $20,000.

PORT AUSTIN, Oct. 15.—The schooner Kate Kelly, Capt. H. J. Hatch, while loading stone at Grindstone City for Chicago, was caught in the gale. After pounding heavily for several hours she was scuttled in order to save her, and is now resting easy and can probably be saved.

DETROIT, Oct. 16.—Many vessels were wrecked along the Michigan shore in Saturday's storm. No lives are reported lost save the six men off the Minnehaha's crew, wrecked off Starke. A partial list of the wrecked vessels is as follows:

Steamer C. F. Curtis, schooners Isabel Reid, and T. S. Fassett and Nelson Holland, and barges Sweepstakes and Knight Templar, ashore near Cheboygan, unknown schooner, ashore near Manistee. It is believed that the schooner Aunt Ruth, which left Alpena last Monday, has been lost. Nothing has been heard of her since she left port. She carried a crew of five men and was owned by C. Bonney, Port Huron.

THE TREASURY NEED

Anomalous Position of the Contending Forces—How the Truth Often Lies Between Extremes—One Great Question That Was Settled Without a Compromise.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 18.—[Special.]—The greatest difficulty in the way of a compromise in the senate last week was the opposition of many Democrats to the issuance of more bonds, but the stress of events was powerful enough in the end to break down this opposition. Those Democratic senators who stood out against the bond issue for some time did so because of their animosity to national banks. They represent constituencies which believe the national banking system is monopolistic, wrong and cruel. Of late years the national banks have had much difficulty in securing government bonds at a low enough rate for the purpose of making deposits as a basis of increased circulation, and pressure for a new bond issue has therefore come largely from the national banks.

A new issue would afford them the means of increasing their circulation. Right here has come in one of the peculiarities of statesmanship when applied to financiering. The same senators who have opposed bonds as an increase of the national debt have demanded more money and an increase of the circulating medium. Though a bond issue would be sure to result in this very thing, they have opposed bonds because of their fear that an issue of new securities would play into the hands of the national banks. Out of a severe contest like this the truth usually shines in the end, and the truth at this time, as every one sees, is that an issue of bonds is not only a necessity, but highly desirable, and that while it may help the national banks, which some people do not like, it will also afford some relief to the country as well as protection to the treasury.

The Treasury Must Have Help.

Up to the last minute during the progress of the great fight in the senate many men persisted in overlooking the truth of the situation. The truth has been that an issue of bonds was an absolute necessity to protect the treasury and the gold reserve, no matter what was done with the Voorhees bill in the senate. For two or three years the revenues of the government have been gradually decreasing, while there has been no diminution of the expenditures. In fact, the government has been gradually approaching bankruptcy, and for a year and a half nothing but smart management and the use of every scrap of money has enabled the treasury to tide over emergencies. The gold reserve has frequently fallen much below the traditional limit of $100,000,000, and available funds for meeting the appropriations of congress have been hard to find, so much so that the secretary of the treasury has been compelled to forego expenditures in the way of public buildings and other matters which had been ordered by congress.

Too Many Politicians.

With the receipts falling below the expenditures a crisis has been gradually approaching, and if men had been able to clear their eyes from the fog and mist of prejudice concerning banks, silver, gold and those things about which statesmen so well love to contend, the truth would have been seen much earlier, and possibly some action might have been taken long before this. But of course politics had to have its part in the programme. It is almost impossible to do anything in congress without an effort to secure either personal or party advantage. If the Republicans had been smart, they would have perceived that their greatest strength lay in some such compromise as that which has been agreed upon, securing the friendship of the silver states by continuing the purchase of white metal, and, while the Democrats were responsible for congress and the executive, putting through the scheme to issue more bonds and increase the national debt.

The Democrats, on the other hand, should have perceived long ago that good politics on their part lay not in a demand for unconditional repeal, but in charging upon the Republicans, who enacted the McKinley law, that through the operations of the new tariff the government was being driven into bankruptcy, and it was the duty of the Democratic party to face the necessity this produced and provide bonds for protection of the treasury and of the gold reserve.

Compromise Often a Good Thing.

In Washington it is extremely difficult to look at any question, legislative or other, without taking politics into consideration. And one may easily imagine, even in Washington, that the people care much less about politics than they do about good, wholesome financiering which will protect the interests of the country and the treasury. The truth is often found to lie between two extremes, and such has proved to be the case in this instance. In the result of the great fight in the senate we have another illustration of the principle that all civilization and nearly all great movements are produced by some sort of compromise between contending forces and influences.

Though a large proportion of the people of the country, stirred up by the vociferousness and insistency of the politicians on one side or the other, had naturally come to believe that either unconditional repeal was absolutely necessary to the prosperity of the country or that free coinage was also necessary, doubtless many of these people will be much better satisfied with the result than they had ever expected to be. Now that the politicians, demagogues and ambitious presidential aspirants have concluded their maneuvers the people can well afford to settle down into the conviction that perhaps, after all, the best and wisest thing has been done.

One Question That Was Not Compromised.

Of course there are exceptions to all rules. It does not always happen that compromise results when great forces meet and clash. We had a striking illustration of this in a remark which was made in the press gallery when Senator Blackburn was making his now celebrated speech in which he charged that last summer's panic was deliberately produced by the bankers. Mr. Blackburn made a long argument to show that everything of importance in legislation and government is usually the result of compromise. He cited instances from the history of our own government and created a very strong impression. None of the senators opposed to compromise appeared to be ready with a fitting reply, but an occupant of the press gallery, a man who had fought on the losing side in the rebellion, offered a bit of comment which was good enough to have been offered on the floor of the senate.

"There was one great question," he said, "which was not settled by a compromise, and when it was settled it was settled for time and eternity. That was the question of American slavery."

AS THE WEST SEES IT.

MORE MEN IN DOUBT ON FINANCE THAN EVER BEFORE.

Uniform Testimony as to a Decline in Farm Values Since 1880, but Recent Improvement in Some Sections—Farmers Appear More Hopeful.

DENVER, Colo., Oct. 18.—[Special.]—In the past three months I have talked with several hundred farmers and villagers in this locality and also from Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and the Dakotas. To them I addressed three direct questions concerning gold and silver, the tariff and the long continued depression in agriculture, and their answers give me a fair average of middle-western opinion on the political issues of the day. In three cases out of four the mental condition may be summed up in one word—doubt. Never in my acquaintance with middle western politics has there been such a general condition of suspended judgment. Never probably did the vehement, and I might say frantic, assertions of editors and congressmen on either side have so little effect.

Real Public Opinion.

Those who assert that the people are eager for immediate repeal of the Sherman law and those who declare the people are clamoring for more silver are equally at fault. The former class make the mistake which men of their kind have made in these United States ever since the days of Alexander Hamilton—they take the utterances of the vocal classes for public opinion. Boards of trade and bankers' conventions call on congress to act at once, but how many do they really represent? In these northwestern states possibly one in a hundred. Behind them are the silent millions, and three-fourths of these are not yet able to satisfy themselves as to what is best in financial matters. As to the tariff, of course opinions are defined, as that has long been debated, and the division is pretty much on party lines.

The silver congressmen make a similar mistake in taking the utterances of the unfortunate and discontented as public opinion, but evidently they are far nearer the truth than their opponents. The discontented are indeed many, and their views are set forth in one sentence: "The country has gone ahead for 30 years at a rate that makes us dizzy, and the farmer hasn't got a mite of the advantage. He isn't a bit better off than he was in 1863 and not near so well off as he was in 1880. Tell us the reason. Give us a remedy. The man who can do that can get all the votes in our parts." Such is the voice that comes to my ears from all the counties where I have acquaintances.

An Important Point.

Here is a point constantly discussed: Between the continous depreciation of silver since 1873 and the almost continuous decline in farm produce prices there is a curiously close correspondence. Is the latter a result of the former? Convince the farmers that it is, and the question of bimetallism is settled instanter. All the resolutions of your bankers and boards of trade will be but as penny whistles in a tropical hurricane. But not only are their minds unsettled on the question, but there is a curious conflict in their testimonies. In some sections of Illinois there has been an actual boom in farm lands within the last year or two. In Indiana and Ohio there has been an advance in the northern sections, while the decline continued in the south—apparently a real transfer of capital. In the vicinity of cities the advance has sometimes been very great.

I may, without being too personal, take the figures on land in my native county in Indiana, probably as good a farming county as there is in the state. In 1850 a magnificent stretch of land lying adjacent to the county town was valued on an average at $25 per acre. In 1860, very little if any of it could have been bought at $50. In 1865, $100 was offered and declined for the best farms, but everybody recognized it as a "greenback price." After the resumption of specie payments in the boom of 1870–82, such farms sold at $80 and $85. The subsequent decline has been rapid and continuous, and good farms have recently sold at $50. The whole county is well supplied with good roads and bridges, churches and schoolhouses. All the swamps are drained, the average health is greatly improved, the debt is small, taxes are not very high, and the general intelligence is remarkable. Yet in 12 years land has lost all the value it had gained in the preceding 20.

A Unique View.

In view of such an extraordinary result the opinion of an old and experienced farmer there may be of value. Such a one said to me: "It is not the result of gold or silver or greenbacks or tariff. Protection can't help it, and free trade won't help it. You may repeal the Sherman law, or you may let it run, and you'll never know the difference. It all comes of this hothouse system of forcing up the new west. Congress gave away the good land out there to railroads, and they fetched in people from the east and Europe and doubled the production right off in 10 years.

"In 1865 we were getting pretty near to a home market, and now we're 27 years further away from it than we were in 1860. And what's the remedy? Why, there ain't any. We've just got to grin and bear it till we outgrow it. What's the good of forcing more manufactures? The goods are so cheap now that the workmen can't half live, and if you raise wages 10 cents a day you'll have a million more people here from Europe in a year to cut 'em down again. We've just overcropped ourselves. It's a good thing, of course, to build up the west, but we farmers in the old states have got to pay for it."

And straightway there was a chorus of dissent from all who heard him. Out of a dozen three or four were positive the trouble resulted from a lack of money, two or three were equally positive the tariff was to blame, as many thought it was cheap silver, and all admitted some doubts. And so it goes all over the country so far as I can hear. A few on each side of the silver question are very positive, many are in doubt, all agree that a depression in agriculture is serious, and nearly all are hopeful of an early improvement.

Rattlesnake Weed.

In California there grows a weed called the rattlesnake weed. It is so named from the story that when rattlesnakes get to fighting and bite each other this weed, if eaten by them, will prevent death. It grows about six inches tall, has a red stalk and slender leaves. On the top of the stalk comes a head of flowers, and the seeds of the flowers are said to be very annoying to one in passing through a mass of them, as they are furnished with sharp barbs commonly called stickers. The early settlers who had herds of sheep always made their herdsmen keep with them a bottle of strong tea made of rattlesnake weed, and when any of the sheep were bitten they were drenched with this tea, which always saved them.

because the alleged steel when it is put out by inexperienced manufacturers have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor.

In this year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor loss is proportionately much less than any wooden wheel, while the loss of the imitation steel ones has frequently been total.

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

☞ These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country." Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO. 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

AWFUL COLLISION.

Twelve Killed Outright Many Injured—One Section of a World's Fair Excursion Train Crashes into the rear of the Other Section at Jackson.

About ten o'clock Friday forenoon word was received here of a terrible rear end collision between two excursion trains on the Michigan Central at Jackson, and the number killed was placed as high as 30. Several persons from this place went to the scene on the noon train and the following is what we heard and saw.

The excursionists were all eastern people on their way to Chicago. The train, on account of its great size, had been divided into two sections. The first left Detroit at about 5:50 a. m., the second following shortly after. At 9:05 section No. 1, pulled up in front of the M. C. depot to allow passengers time for breakfast, and had been standing 26 minutes. Nearly all the men had gone to the lunch rooms to procure refreshments for the loved ones in the train. Suddenly section No. 2 came rushing in at a high rate of speed and before people realized their danger had crashed into the rear end of No. 1, telescoping the two rear coaches and throwing the third coach off the rails to the south. The shock was so great that the whole forward train was driven ahead the width of the main street.

Now occurred a scene never to be forgotten. Coupled with the crashing of timbers and hissing of escaping steam were the cries and groans of the wounded, while everything was horror and confusion.

The first on the scene were the Union moulders from the Weatherwax foundry just opposite the wreck. These men rendered invaluable assistance, and for three hours worked amid the ruins, removing the dead and injured. The number of dead bodies recovered reached 12, and the seriously injured upward of 30, some of whom cannot recover. Heart rending spectacles were seen on every side. Husbands searched for wives, parents for children, and, even when found many were mutilated to be beyond recognition. The head and body of one lady was sent to the morgue, the head not being found for hours. Jackson was for the time one immense hospital and the people did all in their power to relieve the suffering. Business was suspended and probably 20,000 men women and children crowded the yard and covered cars buildings and any elevation which would afford a view. The trains were re-arranged as soon as possible and those who were fortunate enough to escape continued their saddened journey. This fact was confusing as it was hard to tell whether friends had been carried on to Chicago or were imprisoned in the wrecked cars or lying in their last sleep at the morgue or undertaking rooms.

HOW IS HAPPENED.

The accident is charged to the failure of the air brakes to work. Engineer Will Whalen in charge of the second section claims to have tried the air brakes at the Junction and that they worked all right. At Elm street he found that the target was turned against him and applied the air brakes, when to his consternation they refused to respond on the cars, although they worked on the engine; he whistled for brakes twice, sanded the track and reversed his engine, but to no purpose, the long, heavy train behind, running at a high rate of speed could not be controlled, and the locomotive was driven into the rear coach of the head train with irresistable force, and this coach was driven entirely through the one preceding it. The third car was torn from its floor and hurled sidewise to the south. In the rear train the engine, tender and baggage car were all that suffered. The engine did not leave the rails but had its boiler stripped of cab, bell, sand box, stack, and running boards; the tender was demolished: the baggage car turned sidewise and then crashed into an empty passenger car on a siding tearing in the side and tipping it over. As soon as possible the wrecking car was at work clearing the tracks, and at 5 o'clock p. m. the last piece had been removed from the tracks. The telescoped cars were not taken apart, but were mounted on trucks and taken to the shops, where the railroad people might work, from under the eye of the public and if any unpleasant finds were made could more easily follow there weakness for covering up damages under the simple word "missing."

NOTES.

It took the combined efforts of two locomotives to pull the wrecked engine from the telescoped cars, so firmly was it driven into them.

The runaway train ran nearly or quite a half mile after the brakes were applied before it struck the other train.

At nine o'clock in the evening six caskets lay side by side at the M. C. depot waiting for the east bound train.

Superstitious people consoled themselves because the accident was on Friday and the 13th day of the month.

The memento fiend was on the spot and fought for splinters of wood, bits of iron, blood-stained cloth and the like. One man exhibited a tongue, another part of a finger, and still others were satisfied with false teeth.

A Happy Union.

A large company of relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan Smith, Ridgeway, Wednesday eve., Oct. 11th, 1893, to witness the marriage of their daughter Flotie, to Mr. Chas. Staats, of Chatham, N. Y.. At the appointed hour while the wedding march was being played the bride and bridegroom marched into the parlor and took their place under an arch of smilax where by a brief ceremony they were united in the bonds of matrimony. After congratulations and refreshments, the happy couple started on their trip east, stopping at Niagara, and thence on to Chatham, N. Y., which is to be their home for the present.

The presents received by the bride were numerous, useful and beautiful, and showed the love and esteem in which the she was held. Perhaps no young lady will be missed more from the church and society, than will Miss Smith, being not only a devoted Christian, but having an unusual sweet voice for singing she will be missed by the choir of which she has been a member for years. We can but congratulate Mr. Staats in securing for himself such a companion to journey with him through the future years of life. And we wish for them both long years of sunshine and prosperity, and while the friends at home will miss Flotie, yet we believe wherever this happy couple go they will carry with them the kindest remembrances of many friends of former years.

A FATAL FALL.

Mrs. Wm. Kelly Killed by Falling Down a Stairway.

Mrs. Wm. Kelly, of this place, met with a violent death Sunday evening at the home of her son, Lavern Kelly, in Raisin, at whose home she was visiting. Mrs. Kelly, it seems, had gone up stairs for the purpose of getting some articles from her trunk and had declined taking a light with her, saying she could get what she wished without one. She went up the stairway, entered the room and in a few moments was heard returning. When she reached the head of the stairs she must have made a misstep, and losing her balance, plunged headlong to the lower floor. Thoroughly alarmed, the family rushed to the hall where they found Mrs. Kelly on the floor unconcious, with blood coming from her nose and ears. All possible means were used to revive her, and Dr. Fred Seger, of Adrian summoned, but before he could reach her she was dead. Her skull was crushed and collar bone broken. She lived about an hour and a half after the accident. The deceased was 69 years old. The funeral was held yesterday at 9 o'clock a. m., at the home of her son in Raisin.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

PRIZES ON PATENTS.

How to Get Twenty-five Hundred Dollars For Nothing.

Would you like to make twenty-five hundred dollars? If you would, read carefully what follows and you may see a way to do it.

The Press Claims Company devotes much attention to patents. It has handled thousands of applications for inventions, but it would like to handle thousands more. There is plenty of inventive talent at large in this country needing nothing but encouragement to produce good results. That encouragement the Press Claims Company proposes to to give.

NOT SO HARD AS IT SEEMS.

A patent strikes most people as an appalling formidable thing. The idea is that an inventor must be a natural genius, like Edison or Bell; that he must devote years to delving in complicated mechanical problems and that he must spend a fortune on duplicate experiments before be can get a new device to a patentable degree of perfection. This delusion the company desires to dispel. It desires to get into the head of the public a clear comprehension of the fact that it is not the great, complex, and expensive inventions that bring the best returns to their authors, but the little, simple, cheap ones—the things that seem so absurdly trivial that the average citizen would feel somewhat ashamed of bringing them to the attention of the Patent Office.

Edison says that the profits he has received from the patents on all his marvelous inventions have not been sufficient to pay the cost of his experiments. But the man who conceived the idea of fastening a bit of rubber cord to a child's ball so that it would come back to hand when thrown, made a fortune out of his scheme. The modern sewing machine is a miracle of ingenuity—the product of the toil of hundreds of busy brains through a hundred and fifty years, but the whole brillant result rests upon the simple device of putting the eye of the needle at the point instead of at the other end.

THE LITTLE THINGS ARE MOST VALUABLE.

Comparatively few people regard themselves as inventors, but almost everybody has been struck, at one time or another, with ideas that seemed calculated to reduce some of the little frictions of life. Usually such ideas are dismissed without further thought.

"Why don't the railway company make its car windows so that they can be slid up and down without breaking the passengers' backs?" exclaims the traveler. "If I were running the road I would make them in such a way."

"What was the man that made the saucepan thinking of?" grumbles the cook. "He never had to work over a stove, or he would have known how it ought to have been fixed."

"Hang such a collar button!" growls the man who is late for breakfast. "If I were in the business I'd make buttons that wouldn't slip out, or break off, or gouge out the back of my neck."

And then the various sufferers forget about their grievances and begin to think of something else. If they would sit down at the next convenient opportunity, put their ideas about car windows, saucepans, and collar buttons into practical shape, and then apply for patents, they might find themselves as independently wealthy as the man who invented the iron umbrella ring, or the one who patented the fifteen puzzle.

A TEMPTING OFFER.

To induce people to keep track of their bright ideas and see what there is in them, the Press Claims Company has resolved to offer a prize.

To the person who submits to it the simplest and most promising invention, from a commercial point of view, the company will give twenty-five hundred dollars in cash, in addition to refunding the fees for securing the patent.

It will also advertise the invention free of charge.

This offer is subject to the following conditions:

Every competitor must obtain a patent for his invention through the company. He must first apply for a preliminary search, the cost of which will be five dollars. Should this search show his invention to be unpatentable, he can withdraw without further expense. Otherwise he will be expected to complete his application and take out a patent in the regular way. The total expense, including Government and Bureau fees, will be seventy dollars. For this, whether he secures the prize or not, the inventor will have a patent that ought to be a valuable property to him. The prize will be awarded by a jury consisting of three reputable patent attorneys of Washington. Intending competitors should fill out the following blank, and forward it with their application:

——, —— 1893.

"I submit the within described invention in competition for the Twenty-five hundred Dollar Prize offered by the Press Claims Company.

NO BLANKS IN THIS COMPETITION.

This is a competition of rather an unusual nature. It is common to offer prizes for the best story, or picture, or architectural plan, all the competitors risking the loss of their labor and the successful one merely selling his for the amount of the prize. But the Press Claims Company's offer is something entirely different. Each person is asked merely to help himself and the one who helps himself to the best advantage is to be rewarded for doing it. The prize is only a stimulus to do something that would be well worth doing without it. The architect whose competitive plan for a club house on a certain corner is not accepted has spent his labor on something of very little use to him. But the person who patents a simple and useful device in the Press Claims Company's competition, need not worry if he fail to secure the prize. He has a substantial result to show for his work—one that will command its value in the market at any time.

The plain man who uses any article in his daily work ought to know better how to improve it than the mechanical expert who studies it only from the theoretical point of view. Get rid of the idea that an improvement can be too simple to be worth patenting. The simpler the better. The person who best succeeds in combining simplicity and popularity will get the Press Claims Company's twenty-five hundred dollars.

The responsibility of this company is vouched for from the fact that its stock is held by about three hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States.

OBITUARY.

Crowel Eddy was born in Morristown, Morris county, N. J., 1811. In 1815 with his parents he moved to Reading, Schuyler county, N. Y. His boyhood and youth up to nineteen, was passed with his parents upon the farm, when he left the homestead and went to Thammondsport, Steuben Co., N. Y., where he learned and worked at the carpenter and joiners trade in that vicinity until he was twenty-four years of age. In the fall of 1835 he went to Milan, Huron, (now Erie) county, Ohio, and in 1836 was married to Miss Mary Ann Spears, daughter of a thrifty farmer of Milan, and still pursued the same vocation up to 1845, when he came to Michigan and after prospecting in this State he went to Chicago, and thence to Milwaukee and other points in Wisconsin. But returned to Michigan and purchased in Franklin, Lenawee Co., the farm where he has resided since Oct. 1845, and which by the united and untiring industry of himself and noble wife, who died in 1885, had made one of the best and pleasantest homes in Michigan.

A good neighbor, a steadfast friend, an upright man, whom Franklin has owned and trusted so long as one of her most honored citizens. He passed quietly away on Sep. 25th, 1893, after a long and courageous struggle between life and death. He died of cancer. He was tenderly cared for by the loving hands of his children and neighbors through all the long months of pain.

The funeral was held on the 28th, of Sep. at the old homestead. Rev. Merryfield of Manchester conducted the services.

There is nothing which would better attest the sturdy courage of the man in his search for a home than that he drove his own team through what was in large part bad roads and much of the way a wilderness, or better prove his goodness than, that in all the years it was a home where the worthy of all classes loved to meet and were welcome. In improving and clearing up of the land he and his patient wife had many hardships there being only fifteen acres under cultivation. They also had their sorrows. Out of the ten children born to them two died. One a daughter in her fresh, young girlhood. Two sons enlisted in the war for the union, Henry and Charles S., the latter was taken prisoner and suffered untold hardships, exposure, and starvation, in rebel prisons. He died soon after reaching our lines and both the parents bore the burdens of this painful memory through all these years.

Mr. Eddy was a thrifty, intelligent farmer, and instead of the dense forest he found on settling had a large farm under good cultivation; and the primitive log cabin had given way to a fine stone residence. He was well informed and took great interest in public affairs, and had held several offices of trust. In every relation of life he was reliable. His word when given was as good as his bond; and from first to last he maintained the respect due his virtues. At the time of his death he was 82 years of age, but he did not bend beneath the weight of years until the dread disease had made great progress and then but slowly. Previous to this he was always so fresh and vigorous it was easy to forget his years. At this ripe age what better record could he leave than his children all now industrious and law abiding citizens without a stain. In religion he was a Universalist, and nothing could disturb his faith in the goodness of God and the ultimate redemption of all mankind. He had performed his duties faithfully and lovingly as husband and father, and death to him only meant transition and a release from pain.

Though his children and friends grieve his death, yet he looked so peaceful in his last repose who would rob him of his rest.

After the heat and burden of life's middle hours its shade and light,
After the toil and pain, its sun and cloud, and the sunset night
Is welcome, the perfect day of life.

A FRIEND.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

Miss Lulu B. Garlinghouse died at her home in this village Sunday afternoon of consumption, aged 20 years. Miss Garlinghouse has been a sufferer from that disease for some time. She was a graduate of our High School being a member of Class of '92, and was a favorite with all who knew her. The funeral was held at the house yesterday p. m., at 2 o'clock.

Monday Morning dawned up at John Snyder's just as usual this week, but when one of the girls went down cellar for material for breakfast, she found that some one had preceded her and taken everything available, in the line of eatables which could be found. Anything which would serve to refresh the inner man seemed to suit the thief and a nice clean sweep was made of it.

The Telegram of Friday says: The general store of E. L. Gibbs, at Onsted, was broken into for the sixth time last night, and a pair of shoes and other merchandise stolen. A plate glass was taken out and the door then unbolted. It is suspected that the depredator is an Onsted man whose feet are not mates, as the shoes taken were of different sizes.

Last week's foreign papers note that in the criminal courts of London and Paris attention has newly been drawn to the daring use (or it rather might be called misuse) of hypnotic power by unscrupulous persons. The new novel, "Dr. Mirabel's Theory," by Ross Geo. Dering, recently published by Harper & Brothers, is described as bearing dramatically on such an occurence.

The foot ball game, Tuesday afternoon, between the T. H. S. and an eleven from the village, resulted in a score of 8 to 10 in favor of the T. H. S., the last half however being shortened ten minutes by darkness coming on, which might have affected the score. The T. H. S. made two touch downs and a safety, the village two touch downs. Another game will be arranged soon.

Jackson Citizen: This terrible wreck is the first one of consequence to occur on the Michigan Central for a period of fourteen years, the anniversary of that awful affair being Tuesday last. It is a singular circumstance that these horrible wrecks occurred in this city, in the same month and on the same day of the week—Friday. A strange coincidence, very! On Oct. 10, 1879, the west-bound Pacific express crashed into a switch engine, killing eighteen people and injuring thirty-five others.

The following item, clipped from one of our exchanges, may be of interest to voters, who will do well to cut it out and paste it in their hats: Under a new law, if any person elected as a delegate to any caucus or convention, accepts or receives any money or valuable thing as a consideration for his vote as such delegate, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, which is punishable by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

One evening last week, as Thos. Boyd living west of the village, drove into his yard he met another rig coming out. It chanced to be a gentleman taking Mr. Boyd's hired girl out for a drive. The girl claims in the neighborhood of 200 pounds avoirdupois and the man is no light weight. So when the two buggies came in contact Mr. Boyd found the opposing vehicle carried too much ballast for him and over went his apple cart. He recovered his balance as soon as possible and found that the other rig together with its load had disappeared in the dim and hazy distance. Now Thomas would like to interview the other fellow and see who pays for the wreckage.

Marion Crawford opens up a new line of thought, entitled "Rome, the Capital of a new Republic," appearing in the October Cosmopolitan. It is not likely that the October number will have the success which attended that for September. The extraordinary spectacle was presented of a 12 1-2 cent magazine selling for 50 and 75 cents, and many hundreds were even sold at $1.00 each. Probably the record remains without a parallel, in periodical sales, of a number proving so interesting that, after 211,000 copies had been sold, the News Company had orders for 50,000 more than they could supply, while dealers in various parts of the country, discovering the esteem in which the magazine was held immediately raised their prices to double, treble, quadruple and in many cases to eight times the regular price. The publishers do not yet know what their real circulation is, owing to the limited capacity of their presses; but machinery is being put in place which will supply an edition for December exceeding 300,000, and during that month it will be possible to determine just how many Cosmopolitans the public will buy.

A pleasant company gathered at the home of Alfred James last Monday evening, to witness the marriage of his daughter, Elida D., to Mr. Ernest F. Gamble, of Garrett, Ind. Rev. J. Phelps officiating. The happy couple were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents, and the congratulations of many friends follow them to their home in Garrett, for which place they immediately started.

Mrs. Eugenie Gordon, daughter of Mrs. Alice Church, was arrested at Adrian, while there for the purpose of securing bail for her mother and sister, on the charge of being implicated in the late robberies. Mrs. Gordon is a widow, living on a farm north of the village, and it is claimed that various articles were found in her possession which were identified as the property of Albert Brewer and J. L. Anderson, whose houses have been robbed during the past summer.

Last Saturday morning it was found that the home of Mrs. C. A. Stacy on west Main St., had been entered during the night and considerable property removed. Indications were that the depredators would return and complete the job, as the entire family were in Chicago; therefore two men were stationed in the house Saturday night. It was a dark rainy night, and at about half-past nine o'clock the guard heard some one approaching. The intruders opened the door with a key they had procured on the previous evening, came in and were about to light a lamp, when they heard something that alarmed them and broke for the door with the watchers in pursuit. A lively tussle ensued, when it was found that the captives were women. Red pepper was used in the scrimmage, but the women were finally indentified, much to the consternation of the captors, as Mrs. Church and daughter Bessie. Everything taken was replaced by the women, but the next morning they were taken to Adrian, waived examination, and were bound over to the circuit court. The circumstance is learned with regret by all those who were acquainted with Miss Bessie. She has always borne a good reputation and a great many friends here are loth to believe that she could have been implicated. She has been a compositor in this office for the past five years.

HEADLONG THROUGH A WINDOW.

An Old Soldier Jumps from his Chamber Window and is Killed.

John Keegan, 67 years old, and a member of Beers Post G. A. R., died Sunday night at 10:30 from the effects of a fall which he received in the early morning of that day.

Mr. Keegan, has for some time past been boarding at the Central House, but last Saturday night went to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Will Brown, to spend the night. At about 11 p. m. he ate a hearty lunch and retired to his room on the upper floor. About 6 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Brown hearing a disturbance in the room above, took a lamp and went up stairs where she found a window open and the old gentleman gone. Rushing down she gave the alarm and going into the yard, beheld Mr. Keegan lying under the window. He was taken into the house, where it was found that his skull was fractured, collar bone broken and chest badly injured. He lived until 10:30 p. m.

It was ascertained that he had removed the entire lower sash from the north window, laid it upon the bed and then jumped head foremost through the opening. He has been showing signs of insanity for some time past, and it is thought he was out of his head when the casualty occured.

He was a pensioner, and arrangements had about been completed to take him to the Soldier's Home. His only relatives here are two daughters Mrs, Will Brown, as whose home he was, and Mrs. Asa Howe.

An amendment to the silver purchase bill was introduced and the bill itself was discussed.... In the house the Tucker bill to repeal the federal elections law was passed by a vote of 200 to 101. The bill giving settlers on certain lands in Oklahoma the right to commute their homestead entries was passed. The silver purchase repeal bill was discussed, and it was announced by Senator Voorhees that the senate would continue in session until the measure was disposed of.... In the house a joint resolution providing for a recess of congress from October 14 to November 1 was referred to the committee on rules. The bill to amend the Geary Chinese exclusion bill was taken up and the author of the measure, Mr. McCreary (Ky.), spoke in its favor.

THE senate, after a continuous session of forty hours, adjourned at 1:45 o'clock on the morning of the 13th, and thus the bill for the unconditional repeal of the silver purchase law was carried down to defeat. During the debate on the 12th an amendment to the bill was offered by Senator Harris (dem.) which provides for the coinage of all the silver bullion in the treasury into full legal-tender dollars at the rate of 3,000,000 per month, and it was thought this amendment would lead to a final compromise.... In the house the McCreary bill to amend the Chinese registration and exclusion act was discussed and many petitions were presented asking for the repeal of the Geary law.

SEVERAL amendments to the silver-purchase repeal bill were reported in the senate on the 13th. A resolution to change the rules in reference to compelling the attendance of absent senators went over. In answer to an inquiry as to moneys borrowed by the government since March, 1885, the secretary of the treasury sent word that no money had been borrowed.... In the house the McCreary bill to amend and modify the Geary Chinese registration and exclusion act was further discussed. A bill was passed increasing from 75 to 100 the number of army officers who may be detailed for military instruction at educational institutions.

THE END DRAWS NEAR

RESULTS OF THE FAIR BETTER THAN WERE ANTICIPATED.

Americans Know Each Other Better and Are More Hopeful of the Future—In Language and Habits They Are Growing More Alike.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 16.—[Special.]—The end draws near. And now we know a few things of which there had been doubts. That the paid admissions will exceed those at Paris in 1889 and far outgo those of any previous fair, that the debts will all be paid and the stockholders get something—these have already been published. The indications now are that Major Handy's hopes for October were within bounds, and that 5,000,000 or more paid admissions will make this month illustrious. That granted, the count will stand: May, 1,950,037; June, 2,675,113; July, 2,760,263; August, 3,515,493; September, 4,650,871; October, 5,000,000.

We know also that Jackson park will be returned to its owners—the people—more beautiful than ever; that Chicago, though she made some parade of the loss of her subscription, will realize enormously on the fair, and that taken by and large our western people are not nearly so poor as they have been represented. Best of all, we know that upon the whole those have seen this show who ought to have seen it.

The extremely poor, except those of Chicago, have not seen it, of course, but the laboring classes of all this central northwest have formed the mass of the visitors since early in September. The last month seems to belong to the agriculturists especially. The old farmer from Wayback is here and all his neighbors. They are here this last week from Posey county and from Pike—both the Pikes, in fact—from Pigeon Roost and Soonover and Hooppole township, from Wabash Flats and the headwaters of the Kankakee.

Happy Results Among Visitors.

And how they do enjoy it! Much has been said of the educational effects and something of the general spirit of hope and courage, but many other effects must be noted. One is the stimulation of politeness and the spirit of mutual help. As to the spirit of self glorification, that never needed any stimulus in America, and it is to be feared or expected that the eagle will scream louder than ever and "Yankee Doodle" be sounded in the ears of effete Europe on all occasions for a few years, for is not this the greatest show on earth?

But strangest of all the strange facts connected with this great fair is the fact that the parasitic classes did not come. I have not yet seen a beggar in the city, and I naturally expected we should be overrun with them. Street musicians are scarcely more numerous than common. If there is any more gambling than usual, nobody appears to know it, pickpockets have been few, and it is only within the last month that sneak thieves have been very troublesome.

The burning question, "What'll you take?" continues, however, to be the favorite, and it's delightful to hear the old names as one wanders among the new hotels. My old neighbors down on the Wabash call it "bug juice," "talk water" and "forty rod," meaning that that is the distance a man can walk before he drops, after taking a big drink of it. Farther west they call it "sod corn barefooted"—that is, without sugar. In Kansas it is the "sheep herder's delight," and farther on "valley tan," "tarantula juice" and "tiswin"—the last an Apache word. But though there has been much drinking by the late visitors, probably on account of the weather, there has been very little drunkenness. The country people have learned how to gauge their capacities.

Why the West Needed the Fair.

We also know that, disappointments aside, it was wise to locate this fair in the west, for without invidious distinction the west needed this kind of an exhibit much more than did the old Atlantic cities or those who live in their vicinities. Millions of people have seen here what otherwise they never could have seen—the grandest of art collections, government exhibits only second to those in Washington, displays in geology, ethnology and anthropology far greater than were ever before seen west of the Alleghanies; marine fish and other creatures, strange craft from foreign lands, and, better still, strange peoples. Turks, Algerines, Japanese, Hindoos and other orientals are not common in New York and Washington, it is true, but they are there, and all residents have seen them. As to European peoples, however, Chicago is now far more diversified than any eastern city.

This fair has also given us a splendid measure of our progress toward a true and homogeneous nationality, and we now know that while the enormous immigration has added new and strange features the old American stock is becoming one in habits of thought. The difference in complexion and bodily structure is marked—to me it seems greater than it was 30 years ago, and we shall eventually have local types—but the old dialects are rapidly dying out.

The "down east twang" and the pronunciation of vowels according to Webster still raise a smile on the western face occasionally, but the "Hoosier dialect" is about extinct, and the "darky lingo" of the south is following it fast. One might stay about the Indiana building a week and never hear the phrase "gone done it," "gwine to do it" or "don't know nothin about it." Whitcomb Riley may preserve some of the old talk for future students, but it is a dead language. The soft southern accent remains, but the words are good English, and the local dialects of Missouri and Arkansas are heard occasionally, but railroads and common schools are fast making us a people of one speech and that the printed English.

There Are Still Some Disappointments.

Of many other good results predicted I am not able to see the proofs. Good order has been maintained, of course. Americans and foreigners have co-operated in a friendly way, but we were already friends. The parliament of religions was a marvelous success, and the gathering of men of diverse faiths in harmony has indeed been an event, but 50 years from now will be the time to say what good has come of it.

Everybody hoped the London world's fair of 1851 would usher in a long era of peace, but it was followed by 20 years of great wars, so no one has ventured on any such prophecy here. Some of the speakers say this fair will teach Americans a more economical use of their natural resources, but I do not see why. Summing up, I should express the best practical result of this fair in one word—Hope! Almost every visitor goes away with the brightest anticipations for our immediate future.

Man's Superiority.

According to Dr. Darwin and others, it takes a monkey thousands of years to make a man of himself, but a man can make a monkey of himself in a minute. We lead the world.—Dallas News.

THE INSIDE GOSSIP.

RUMORS OF COLDNESS BETWEEN PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Possibly It May Have Been Caused by Patronage—Election Laws Gossip—Great Opposition to the Issue of Bonds—The Gold Reserve.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 16.—[Special.]—There has been a good deal of curiosity in the country concerning the failure of Vice President Stevenson to take some action that might help out the administration in its struggle for unconditional repeal of the Sherman law. The inside gossip of the capital, which your correspondent can vouch for as being well founded, has it that the president and vice president are not on the best of terms. While it would not have mattered so very much if they had been, so far as the repeal bill was concerned, the rules of the senate making it almost impossible for the vice president to help along a vote, the fact still remains that there has been a breakage of all amicable relations between the men who were at the head and tail respectively of the Democratic ticket last year.

Just what the bone of contention was between these two great leaders of the Democratic party no one seems to know. The probabilities are, however, that it was patronage. It happened during the progress of the campaign last year that General Stevenson promised a good many of his political and personal friends to do something for them when he came to Washington. On arriving here he found that the patronage which he controlled in his own office amounted to two places, a private secretary and a messenger, and as these were not sufficient to go round among his many friends and dependents he, naturally, like the generous and loyal man that he is, sought to do something at the other end of the avenue. There his efforts met with no response. The appointments which the vice president asked for President Cleveland did not make. The visits of the vice president to the executive mansion became fewer and fewer, and now he does not go there at all. He has his opinions of the administration and of President Cleveland, as he has of many other things, but he does not say a word. There has been no open rupture between Cleveland and Stevenson; simply a gulf, cold and dismal, has yawned between them. This is what the gossips are saying in Washington, and for once the gossips are not far wide of the mark.

Queer Ways the Politicians Have.

Many southern Democrats think a great mistake has been made in repealing the federal election laws. While they were all exceedingly anxious to have those laws wiped from the statute books, as they had promised to do in their campaign speeches and in their party platforms, now that the house has taken action they are sorry from a partisan standpoint that the thing is done. It is not that the southern Democrats love the federal election laws or that they really wish to have a continuance of supervisors and marshals at the polls, but in the south the Democratic party has made stock in trade of the election laws, which the Republicans had passed and were compelled to defend, and this stock in trade they are now wiping out by their own votes.

So long as the Republican election laws were in force Democratic orators throughout the south had the best sort of argument with which to stir the blood of the faithful and hold them in line. It was with this bugaboo, or banshee, or bad man, real or imaginary, that they threatened their followers into subjection and loyalty and prevented them going over to the Populists. As soon as these laws disappear from the statute books Democratic leaders throughout the south will find themselves severely handicapped. Gone will be the weapon which they have been accustomed to use with such effect. At least this is what many leaders from that section say, and the regret of these men that the law is to be repealed stands as a curious illustration of political methods and insincerity.

Wharton Barker, the Great Schemer.

Mr. Wharton Barker, who won notoriety a week or two ago with his proposition to put tariff and silver in the same boat and defeat all efforts to change existing laws concerning either of them, is a remarkable man. This is not the first time that Mr. Barker has projected himself upon the political sky. At least twice before he has shot meteorlike across the firmament. Mr. Barker is a Quaker, a banker, a man of wealth and learning and one of the most persuasive and seductive talkers that the good city of Philadelphia ever produced.

Mr. Barker loves to take up some political scheme, usually of his own invention, which must be carried to a successful issue, if at all, only by unexampled combinations of men, secret movements, long headed anticipation of events and conditions and skillful work under cover. In this manner, according to Mr. Barker himself, he foresaw the warfare between the Blaine and Grant factions in the Republican national convention of 1880 and foresaw, moreover, that a dark horse or compromise candidate would carry off the prize. With this idea firmly fixed in his mind Mr. Barker went to work not only to select this winning dark horse, but to arrange that there should be no mistake about his nomination. As Mr. Barker himself tells the story, he selected James A. Garfield, put Garfield in training, induced him to go to Chicago and make himself conspicuous before the convention, and then, when the proper moment arrived, started the Pennsylvania delegates voting for him.

The Gold Reserve and Bonds.

The plan to amend the Sherman law by providing that there shall always be maintained in the treasury $100,000,000 of gold to hold as a reserve fund and as a pledge of our government to maintain parity between gold and silver issues is much talked about just now at the senate end of the capitol, the first hint of this as a basis of compromise in the great silver fight coming from Senator Gorman 10 days ago, after his return from a visit to New York. Later it transpired that the suggestion came originally from Pierpont Morgan and his associates, who had been giving much attention to the situation in the senate.

The $100,000,000 reserve is a mere tradition, having its origin at the time when John Sherman was secretary of the treasury and making his plans for the resumption of specie payments. He instituted the $100,000,000 reserve, and following administrations have regarded it as a precedent worthy the highest respect. This reserve has been as high as $150,000,000, and it has been as low as $93,000,000. It was the gradual dwindling away of this reserve that brought on or at least marked the approach of the panic of last summer. Inasmuch as it would be idle to declare by law that a reserve must be maintained without providing means for maintaining it, an issue of bonds is a part of all the schemes of compromise, but a tremendous opposition has been met with in both senate and house.

THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA.

In connection with the foregoing report of our Ornithological Chapter, it is only right to call the attention of all lovers of birds to the magnificent work now being issued by the Natural Science Association of America, and entitled "The Birds of North America." Edition limited to 1,000. It is emphatically an original work, original in design and execution, and whether in letter press, illustrations or price, it is unapproached by anything of the kind in existance. It is recommended by the highest scientific, ecclesiastic and educational authority as being the most attractive, meritorious, pure and ennobling exporition of our ornithology yet given to the public. Dr. Elliott Coues, author of "Birds of the North-West," says: "It is a really notable work." Prof. C. J. Maynard, author of the "Birds of Eastern North America," says: "It contains the best pictures of the species which I have ever seen." Thos. G. Gentry, author of "Life Histories of Birds," and "Nests and Eggs of Birds of the United States," says: "It is the cheapest and best publication on ornithology in this country. The drawings are of a very high order, and rivals in beauty of design and finish the more costly works published abroad or in this country. It should be found in our homes and in libraries generally." And, according to Dr. Theodore Gill, a member of the National Academy of Sciences, "It is not only a meritorious volume, but is altogether so handsome as to make it a very appropriate presentation book or ornament for the family table." It is an imperial quarto volume of engraved figures of all our species, artistically reproduced, true in all hues of color to their natural plumage and botanical surroundings. It also includes a copious text description of their habits and characteristics, and embracing in general the observations made by the most eminent writers on ornithology, and a systematic table, arranged according to the classification adopted by the American Ornithologists' Union, includes all the additions and corrections of our North American species which have been made to date, with an index to page, plate and figure of each species according to the A. O. U. number. It is illustrated with one hundred and nineteen full page colored plates, each representing from one to thirty or more species. It is the finest book on American birds issued since Audubon, and is pronounced by some authorities surperior to that now rare and costly work. It is issued in half and full bindings, Russia, seal, or morocco, at the net price of $40 and $45 respectively; but in response to a special letter, the association authorized me to say that a substantial discount will be made to such of our A. A. members and others as are working naturalists. We commend this work especially to members of the Wilson Ornithological Chapter. It is also a very useful and appropriate addition to the home and reference library, and for presentation purposes generally. Address regarding it, the Natural Science Association, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Sample of plates and text can be had by sending twenty-five cents in postage stamps.

KILLED A DOZEN.

Michigan Central Trains Collide at Jackson.

Twelve Passengers Are Killed Outright, Two May Die and Twenty-Two Others Are Badly Hurt—Air-Brakes Failed to Work.

AN AWFUL DISASTER.

JACKSON, Oct. 14.—The second greatest accident in the history of the Michigan Central railroad occurred here Friday morning within 100 yards of the place where almost fourteen years ago to a day the Pacific express crushed into a freight engine in October, 1879, and eighteen people were killed. Friday's disaster has so far a record of twelve dead, two probably fatally injured and twenty-one others more or less severely hurt. The injured passengers are all residents of New York and Pennsylvania. The dead are:

Maggie McMasters, aged 20, Penn Yan, N. Y.
Mrs. J. H. Keeley, Hammondsport, N. Y.
George Huffman, Lowman, N. Y.
Mrs. Norton Beardsley, Canton, Pa.
Mrs. Charles Starr, Elmira, N. Y.
Mrs. Darwin Gibbs, Wheeler, Steuben county, N. Y.
James Woodbury, Bath, N. Y.
Mrs. Leoni Woodbury, wife of James Woodbury, Bath, N. Y.
Miss Harriet Breese, Pine City, N. Y.
William R. Gilmore, Morris Run, Pa.
Mrs. William R. Gilmore, Morris Run, Pa.
A baby about 3 months old, child of Mrs. Anson Harrington of Elmira, N. Y.

The colliding trains were the first and second sections of the New York Central special day-coach excursions to Chicago, carrying people to the world's fair. The first section had stopped at Jackson for breakfast and had just started to pull out when the second section, traveling at a rate of 40 miles an hour, dashed past the semaphore and crashed into the rear end of the train ahead. The heavy locomotive plowed its way under and through the passenger coaches, smashing them into bits and throwing the fragments high into the air. The trains were crowded with passengers and the engine did fatal work as it tore through the cars.

The cause of the accident was the failure of the air brakes on the second section. The engineer says that when he passed the semaphore he tried to stop the train, but found the brakes would not work. He and the fireman saved their lives by jumping, but both were hurt. The collision occurred about 100 yards east of the station.

The terrible force of the collision threw some of the passengers out of the wrecked coaches to the side of the track, where they lay dead or suffering. Almost before the trains had come to a standstill the work of rescue had been commenced. The men who were congregated near the station and had witnessed the accident rushed to the relief of the injured. Within twenty minutes six dead bodies had been removed from the wreck.

The passengers were jammed into all sorts of positions by the crashing timbers. Some were thrown to the floor and held down by the seats falling on them. Others were fastened in the seats or chairs by the framework of the car being smashed down about them. There were many narrow escapes. Men and women were taken out unhurt, often lying for an hour beneath a mass of splintered wood that had to be chopped to pieces before they could be released. It took almost two hours to remove all the victims.

The fearful effect of the collision and the awful force with which the trains came together is demonstrated in horrible manner by the mangled remains of the dead as they lie at the morgue. Almost every corpse is frightfully disfigured and many of them would be utterly beyond recognition were it not for cards, letters or other means of identification found on their persons.

The first section of the excursion train was called the "Oswego" and the last section the "Webb" special. Engineer Bill Whalen, who lives here, was running the last section. He says: "I saw the signal in the yard to keep back, and had my engine in hand, as I thought, but when I came down near the train, which was still, my air-brake would not work, and I ran into the coaches. The failure of the air-brake made it impossible to stop. I never had such an experience before." Mr. Whalen is badly burned, and has one leg broken, but he will live.

JACKSON, Oct. 15.—Since the Michigan Central accident Friday Chief of Police Boyle has been getting witnesses to appear before the coroner's jury. The most important witness will be Alfred T. Slater, an old railroad man. He was within a short distance of the scene of the accident and saw the engine plow into the train load of excursionists. He corroborated the story of Engineer Whalen in detail. He was walking along the track between the standing train and the one approaching. A few seconds after the crash occurred he noticed a poorly dressed man, who looked as though he might have been a tramp, standing on the platform of the car next the engine. The cock behind the tank of the engine that connects the air-brake was found turned immediately after the wreck. This prevented the air-brake from working. It is believed that the tramp wanted to get off the train before it got into the station and turned the cock, thinking it would make the train slack up.

A NEW LECTURE SCHEME.

The latest plan devised by Chautauqua consists in sending lectures, syllabuses and all other materials to such centers as desire local lectures but are as yet unable to afford the expense of a lecturer. The Chautauqua extension lectures are arranged in courses of six lectures each and are furnished in printed or mimeographed form. Local ministers, school teachers and others are secured to read them and questions for discussion at the close of each lecture are suggested in the syllabus, a copy of which is given to every ticket holder. Nearly seventy courses were given last winter with only one set of lectures, and so satisfactory were the results that five courses are now offered.

The new plan of read lectures devised by the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle includes five valuable courses in the following lines: Social Science, by Prof. A. W. Small, Head Professor of Sociology in the University of Chicago, a course treating of many of the pressing social questions of the times; Prophecies concerning the Fall of Jerusalem, by Dr. William R. Harper, the well known Biblical specialist; Mediaeval History and Art, by Prof. Wm. H. Goodyear, of the Brooklyn Institute, this course accompanied by an illustrated syllabus; The Poetry and teaching of Robert Browning, and Greek Social Life by professor Owen Seaman, a graduate of Cambridge, England. Communities which cannot afford the expense of a lecturer are particularly fortunate to be able to secure such courses without financial risk.

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

DR. A. OWEN:

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in stating that the Owen Electric Belt purchased from you last M... has been worth more than all the medicines in the world to me. On the 27th of January, 18... was taken with La Grippe and from that to nervous prostration of the stomach and spine, ... complaint, exitation of the lungs and constipation. About this time I went to consult the ... doctor in the county for treatment. I stopped at my mother's home on my return, as my pro... tion was so great that I could not reach my own home which I dearly loved. I was a ... married wife of six months and had kept house only four months. My hopes seemed all ... as I gradually failed under the care and treatment and nursing by my kind and willing husband and mother, one of the best of mothers. I could not get up or be moved, so my husband sold ... farm and turned all of his attention to me. Time passed, and I suffered more than tongue can ... I could eat nothing to speak of, and what I did eat hurt my stomach. At times I seemed ... and then I would get worse. I remained in this condition about sixteen months, or up to the ... I purchased your Belt. Then I commenced to improve at once, and life has been brighter ... since. My husband has purchased another farm and we commenced to keep house on ... ing Day, and I have done our work with my husband's help ever since. Before I purchased ... of your Belts I could hardly stand on my feet. May God bless you, as the Owen Electric Belt ... band one more. I cannot say enough for your Belt if I should write half a day. My ... provement caused a good deal of excitement, as the doctors and every one around said I would ... die of consumption. I can eat my three meals every day. If you wish to publish this letter ... will answer all correspondents who wish to inquire fully about my case, by sending directed ... stamped envelope.

Yours very truly,
MR. EDWIN and HATTIE McGOWAN,
KEELERSVILLE, Mich.

KEELERSVILLE, Mich., Aug. 21, 1893.

DR. A. OWEN:

Dear Sir—Six months has passed since I wrote my first testimonial letter in praise of your Electric Belt. I cannot say enough for your Belts. I have been improving rapidly since I wrote you the first letter six months ago. Now I am able to do my work, and this week I rode 22 miles to Thunder Knob on the banks of Lake Michigan, camped out over night, and came back the next day over hills and rough roads, 44 miles in all, through the hot sun. I could not have done the same one year ago for the wealth of Michigan. My health has improved so rapidly that others are wakin up to the idea that the Owen Electric Belts are the only means by which they can be cured.

I remain as ever your friend, HATTIE H. McGOWAN.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a coustitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

OBITUARY.

The death of Miss Lulu E. Garlinghouse occurring Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, 1893, at her parents residence in this city, took from our community one of its most exemplary young ladies

Born in Tecumseh, Nov. 18, 1873, her life, with the exception of six years, had all been spent in our midst.

Of modest, retiring disposition she moved quietly but with power among her fellows. She began and completed her school life in the Tecumseh public schools. She graduated from the high school, a member of the class of '92.

Five years ago she gave herself to her Savior and became a member of his church on earth, being baptised into the fellowship of the Baptist church of this place by Rev. Frank Adkins, then pastor. Her religious life was characterized by a quiet devotion and earnest discharge of duty. Never extremely robust in health she was unable to withstand the attack upon her strength and consumption numbered one more for its victim.

Her funeral on Wednesday p. m., was largely attended by friends of herself and family. Six members of the class of '92 were present. Her Sabbath school teacher and the members of the class were all present, and as they passed the casket each deposited a small bouquet. The class of '92, the B. Y. P. U. and many friends were represented by tokens of flowers. Her pastor, Rev. H. A. Smith conducted the services. She was laid to rest in our beautiful cemetary, and there awaits the resurrection of the just.

CROP REPORT FOR 1893.

Dry Weather Reduces Wheat Acreag and Hurts Corn and Potatoes.

LANSING, Oct. 20.—The crop report for Michigan gives the wheat crop of the state for this year at 23,690,693 bushels, the average yield being 15.01 bushels per acre. Wheat is of good quality and full weight. The average yield of oats was 26.96 bushels per acre. Corn is estimated to yield in the state 48 bushels of ears per acre, and potatoes 56 per cent. of the average crop. The estimate for winter apples is 22 per cent. of an average crop. The dry weather has greatly damaged corn and potatoes, delayed wheat sowing, and reduced the wheat acreage.

Returns After Twenty-Two Years' Absence.

HOLLAND, Oct. 21.—Magnus Knite, brother of ex-Alderman Jacob Knite, arrived here Friday after an absence of twenty-two years, during which time he had been considered dead. He reports that at the time of the Custer massacre he, with his wife and child, was captured by the Indians, that his wife and child were killed, and that he had been kept prisoner for eight years. During the first two years he had been kept tied up and gagged most of the time, the Indians gradually allowing him more liberties until he made his escape.

The Michigan Trust company, receiver of the Peters Salt and Lumber company, will probably succeed Mr. Henry. It is believed that in the end nearly all of Peters' great property will be restored to him.

Disconnected Thoughts on the Fair.

Much has been said about the success of the Fair. Brilliant writers have given us eloquent descriptions of the wonderful buildings. They have told us of the magnificent exhibition gathered from all parts of the earth; of the beautiful paintings, of the curios from foreign countries of the great inventions which have revolutionized the industrial world in the last quarter of a century. We have read these articles with pleasure and have only thought of the fair as a glorious success, an achievement which reflected credit upon American enterprise and enthusiasm, something of which we might all be proud, the greatest expostion the world ever saw. Few have known of the failures connected with the exposition, or how nearly the great fair itself came to being a failure. And why should we trouble ourselves with such things when there is so much that is grandly successful.

But there are lessons to be learned from the mistakes of life, equally important with those taught by success. Probably no one will ever know of all the blasted hopes and disappointments of this Columbian year. Almost every one knows how badly the promoters of some of the World's Fair Hotel schemes got left. At one time there were thirty-four of the large hotels in the vicinity of Jackson Park, in receiver's hands. Many visitors at the White City noticed just outside of the north fence, on the lake shore, that huge structure of pine timber partly covered with staff. It was McKay's Spectatorium, where the promoters planned to produce the grandest spectacular play the world had ever seen. That great pile represents the expenditure of over $400,000, and it was lately sold for $2250. It will be taken down and removed.

One of the most conspicuous failures in the grounds is the Barre Sliding Railway. The same thing was in successful operation in Paris, and I remember reading an account of it in the Scientific American at the time. Could it have been put in successful operation it would undoubtedly have been a paying enterprise, but it was builded on the sand, and did not stand the test. When the trial came, the heavy rain settled the foundation in places, and threw the structure out of line, the motor ran off the track and the whole thing stands to-day just as the workmen left it that Sunday afternoon, three months ago.

The newspapers of Chicago should be credited for much of the success of the fair. In the early weeks of the exposition when everything was incomplete and confusion, and disorder reigned, the press told the people of all that was perfect and beautiful, and said nothing of the rest. And so all through the season the Chicago papers have been full of praises for nearly everything connected with the exposition, but have studiously avoided mentioning anything which might possibly be looked upon with disfavor by the public. But why dwell on this subject? I have already given more attention to it then I intended.

Chicago is thronged with people these days. There are large crowds at the fair every day. Trains are loaded both ways, and at all the stations one will find a jam at any time of day. Yet there is plenty of room for more. Rooms are to be obtained at very reasonable rates, and board is cheap. The large and varied exhibit of weather is one of the features of the season. One day the Esquimeaux find themselves reveling in atmosphere imported from their icy home, and the next day seems to be made to order especially for the inhabitants of Dahomey village.

This is children's week and the grounds to-day were overrun with the youngsters, who plainly showed their appreciation of every thing. Chicago schools are closed for a week and all children under eighteen years of age are admitted for ten cents. Chinese fireworks in the west end of Midway this evening proved to be one of the most novel attractions we have had. They were furnished by the Chinese village, and for genuine Fourth of July racket, exceeded the wildest imaginations of any young American.

There are quite a number of Tecumseh and Macon people here and I had a pleasant visit to-day with old acquaintances. Only 15 more days, and then! Well it is not known yet just what will happen. Will tell you later. H. M. R.

CLEVELAND'S PLUCK.

AN EXAMPLE OF THE PRESIDENT'S REMARKABLE INFLUENCE.

His Efforts In Behalf of the Repeal Bill. His Belief That It Was a "Holy War." Are Our Great Men Running Out?—The Present Day Average Ability.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 23.—[Special.]—The silver fight in the senate has given us a remarkable example of the power which the president of the United States wields over congress when he cares to exert himself. It is a common saying here that for several weeks all the pluck and combativeness shown in the fight for repeal was furnished by Mr. Cleveland, and than this there could be nothing more true. Mr. Cleveland has shown that he is a fighter from a fighting family. It was he who pushed the repeal bill through the house of representatives with unexampled rapidity. In the senate he had a world of trouble, but if it had not been for his influence the bill would not have had a ghost of a chance in that body.

It is not generally known, but it is true, that when the senate met last August it was in favor of the free coinage of silver. A majority of the body would have voted for a free coinage measure had such a bill been brought to a vote. It was nothing but the influence of the president which changed this free coinage majority into a majority for unconditional repeal. In changing over Democratic votes the president came very near exhausting his power. He could cause senators to be classified for unconditional repeal who at heart were not for it, but he could not [illegible] to do this also, the repeal bill would have passed long ago.

If he had be[illegible] able to do this also, the repeal bill would have passed long ago.

After the failure of the physical test plan almost every man in Washington said the repeal bill was hopelessly beaten. Five of the eight members of the cabinet advised a compromise. Mr. Cleveland, almost alone, held out and ordered the fight to be carried on with renewed vigor. He applied courage and persistency for the whole repeal force. He did manage to stop the mouths of some of his supporters who were talking compromise. He intimidated others to give up their efforts to bring forward a compromise measure. For several days last week the fight was carried on almost entirely on the pluck furnished by Mr. Cleveland personally. Though feeling themselves beaten, his supporters did not dare disobey his orders.

What the President Did.

Every newspaper man who has watched this situation knows how great has been the power of the president. Senator after senator who cursed Mr. Cleveland in private conversation, who declared his unconditional repeal programme was ruining the party, who avowed they would not be tied to further what they called the dictation of Mr. Cleveland to such lengths if upon an appeal to the Democratic caucus, left the cloakrooms and corridors where they felt safe to indulge in this sort of criticism, walked in on the floor and carried out Mr. Cleveland's fight as if their very lives depended upon it. For at least two weeks the contest for unconditional repeal was waged as if it were the policy of the Democratic party, when the facts were that of 45 Democratic senators only seven were ready to vote for repeal, and of these 22 were hoping there would be some sort of compromise. Could there be more striking testimony to the leadership and power of President Cleveland?

Mr. Cleveland's "Holy War."

Your correspondent has the best of reasons for saying that during this whole struggle Mr. Cleveland has regarded himself not only as the Democratic president, but as the guardian of the best interests of the American people. Rightly or wrongly, he has believed this the most important question that has come up in this country since the time of slavery. He has believed he was carrying on a sort of "holy war," and that right being on his side and the people he could not lose. That Mr. Cleveland has a wonderful amount of courage and combativeness the facts show, if evidence were needed on this score. His great weakness has been lack of tact in dealing with members of his party who were inclined to be against him, but who might have been induced to stand with him or at least not to give aid and comfort to the opposition.

Judged purely as a contest of forces, as a struggle between the president on one side and a great section of his party on the other—the repeal fight has been intensely interesting. It has again developed the truth of the saying that a president rarely has the sympathy and support of a majority of his party members of the upper branch of congress. That Mr. Cleveland has been able to carry on his "holy war" so long under the circumstances speaks volumes for his force and for the power which he has exerted as chief magistrate.

John Sherman's Great Speech.

The greatest speech made during the silver struggle was that of John Sherman. Mr. Sherman is the Nestor of public life in this country today. He enjoys the respect and admiration of every man in the senate. Though one of the leaders of the Republican side, it is well known that so far as finance goes Mr. Sherman is more of a statesman than a politician. Even the men who do not agree with him believe he is always actuated by strong convictions of public duty in his efforts to mold the financial system of the government. After remaining silent for many weeks, a mute witness of the storm that was raging about him, every eye was upon him, every ear attentive, when he finally rose to speak.

It was a dramatic scene when he arraigned the Democratic party for its impotency, for its failure to act for its seemingly hopeless divisions. When he warned the Democrats that the American people are essentially a people of action and that they have no patience with delay, when he warned the Democracy that they were responsible, and if they did not soon give a good account of their stewardship the people would take them at their true worth and drive them out of power, every Democrat in the senate chamber felt that he was uttering words of wisdom and truth. It was a great tribute to Mr. Sherman's utterances that no sooner had he spoken than leading Democratic senators at once began circulating a petition for a caucus to seek a way out of the dilemma.

Where Are the Great Men?

"Is John Sherman the last of his race? Is our strain of great men running out?" These were questions often heard in the senate chamber on that memorable day. Men answered it according to their views. The majority, perhaps, declared in the affirmative and said we have no Websters, no Clays, no Calhouns, no Bentons in these days. They were sure the senate was once a small body of great men, whereas now it is a large body of small men. Others say we have no Websters or Clays or Calhouns now, because the average of ability is so much higher that a few strong men do not shine forth with such conspicuous luster. There are arguments on both sides, and it is a question which every one will have to decide for himself.

TODAY'S NEWS AND GOSSIP IN WASHINGTON.

The Most Perfect Postal Establishment In the World Wolcott Indulges In Sarcasm For the Cause of Temperance—A Triumphant Ruse.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 23.—[Special.]—Postmaster General Bissell has been out to see the World's fair. While there he became much interested in a guessing contest which was going on in one of the Chicago papers, a prize having been offered to the nearest guess to the total attendance on Chicago day. Mr. Bissell is a good deal of a mathematician himself and likes nothing better than to indulge in calculations leading toward something numerical and future. He was too late to get a guess on Chicago day, but contented himself with sitting down and figuring out to his own satisfaction just how great the total attendance at the fair would be to the close of the last day, Oct. 31. The postmaster general had a process of his own for arriving at his result. What that process was your correspondent is unable to say, but Mr. Bissell gives his estimate of the total attendance at 22,250,000. In a week or ten days we shall be able to ascertain how good a guesser our good natured postmaster general is.

"A Perfect Postoffice.

The postmaster general was very much pleased with the postoffice which the department maintains in the Government building at the World's fair. He made a careful inquiry concerning the operation of that office and discovered that it [illegible] most perfect postal establishment in the world. Picked experts were sent to the office not only from the Chicago postoffice, but from other offices, as this was intended to represent the perfection of American post office operations. That it has succeeded in this effort there can be no question, for many foreign commissioners and exhibitors have voluntarily given testimony to the efficiency of the service. They unite in declaring that it is the best thing in that line that they have ever seen, and many of them are surprised to discover that such perfection of postal service is possible. They have had six deliveries and collections each day that the fair has been open, excepting Sunday, and the promptness with which mail has been delivered, as well as the intelligence shown by the carriers and assorters in putting on the straight and narrow path of destination thousands of misdirected letters, has roused the enthusiasm of our foreign visitors.

Mr. Wolcott's Sarcasm.

Senator Wolcott has a very happy way of giving little side raps at the leaders on the other side of the senate. One day last week orders came from the White House to Senator Voorhees that the senate should be held in session until 11 o'clock that night for the purpose of helping to live out the silver obstructionists. "And here we have the most magnificent example of senatorial independence of the executive that I ever saw," said Senator Wolcott, in speaking of the incident. "President Cleveland sends down word that the senate must sit until 11 o'clock tonight, and Senator Voorhees rises up in all his dignity as a senator of the United States and as an embassador from the sovereign state of Indiana, as Mr. Morgan would put it, and on his own responsibility, without consultation with Mr. Cleveland or his secretary of the treasury, and as it were bidding defiance to them and to their authority, changes the order from 11 o'clock until 10. Was there ever a finer instance of senatorial dignity and independence?" And with this sally Mr. Wolcott strode away to the cloakroom to tell a western story to some of his senatorial friends.

Senator Lindsay on Long Speeches.

Senator Lindsay of Kentucky is one of those statesmen who will never make a long speech. He despises long speeches for their own sake and on account of his reputation. He says he would never wish to become known as a long winded orator. Since coming to the senate he has heard men boast of their ability to talk for one day, or two days, or any number of days, and these boasts have filled him with an unutterable disgust. "I would rather have a reputation of being able to eat 50 quails in 30 days," said Mr. Lindsay to your correspondent "than to be known to the country as a man who was able to speak for 15 or 20 hours on the floor of the senate. I would rather be known as a man who could walk a thousand half miles in a thousand half hours, or as a man who could eat 40 pies in 40 minutes, or suck four dozen eggs before breakfast, or anything of that sort. Almost any of these feats would be more in my line than to bore the senate with a speech 10 or 12 hours longer than there was any reason for its being."

A Senator Under Surveillance.

During the recent silver fight in the senate the discovery was accidentally made that a certain conspicuous senator was under the surveillance of the sergeant-at-arms. The senator in question has in times past been more or less addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. His friends were determined that on the occasion of these demoralizing night sessions he should be prevented from falling by the wayside. So they turned the case over to Sergeant-at-arms Bright, who is one of the best tacticians and managers in the world. If any man could induce another to take a drink when he did not wish to, or to leave a drink alone when he wanted it very badly, Sergeant-at-arms Bright is the man. He stood with this senator from first to last. His eye was never off him. When the senator went to lunch, Mr. Bright lunched with him. When he went for a drive, Mr. Bright or one of his trusted lieutenants was by his side. The result was a triumph for the management of the sergeant-at-arms. Not a drop of intoxicating drink passed the lips of the senator throughout the whole exciting siege.

A Great Invention For Miners.

A lately invented airbag has been given a practical test in the deep anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania. According to The Coal Trade Journal, it has proved a success, and the invention will be the means of saving hundreds of lives. The apparatus consists of an airbag, an appliance to hold the nose shut and a battery and small incandescent lamp. The airbag is made of stout canvas, worn on the back and fastened under the arm. From the top to the bag a rubber hose runs to the wearer's mouth. The air is inhaled from the bag and expelled through the nostrils. The battery is strapped about the person, and the lamp is pinned to the coat. After a big explosion, when it is dangerous to enter the mine owing to the rapid collection of firedamp, rescuers can be fitted out with the airbags and enter the pit without any ill effects.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

GOSSIP FROM GOTHAM

Mr. Richard Croker's Rule of Tammany Hall—Fame That Came Like a Rocket. A Good Political Precept—Anecdote of Robert Bonner.

NEW YORK CITY, Oct. 20.—[Special.]—Although 100,000 fortunate and patriotic citizens, more or less, are at the World's fair in Chicago to see that Manhattan day is observed properly, yet they are not missed upon our streets or in our homes, for there are nearly 2,000,000 struggling, striving, toiling, moiling, pushing souls still left on this little narrow strip of land. What changes the whirligig of time has wrought within a few short months! Until it was known with absolute certainty that the fair was to be a success artistically and financially there was nothing too mean to be said about it by the New York papers. But now the green eyed monster, jealousy, seems to have slunk away, and Manhattan has really done herself credit by contributing liberally both of money and encouragement to the occasion, pausing in the midst of an exciting political campaign to give the affair the brilliancy of well directed effort. Among the contributions is a carload of cut flowers, which has just left the city bound for the New York building at the fair.

A Man of Tact.

Yet politics booms, and Mr. Richard Croker is the most prominent man in the city just now. He holds Tammany Hall in far closer subjection than it was ever held by John Kelly. Yet his iron rule is both judicious and progressive. He has marvelous tact and common sense and believes in new blood and young men. "Tammany has got to keep good men to the fore," said he the other day, "or the public will have no use for it. The people are mightier than any political body, even than one so strong as Tammany."

And what a marvelous career this man has had! Eight years ago he had hardly a penny, so he says, and today he is worth not far from a million and has invested in the past year and a half or two years nearly half that sum in racing stables, breeding farms and city property. Not only that, but he has a wife who is somewhat of a leader in society and has adopted or resurrected a tasteful and appropriate coat of arms, "Deus alit eos"—"God feeds them"—a very good motto.

From a coroner to a fire commissioner, a city chamberlain, and now at the head of the greatest political organization of the kind in the world, is quite a rise, but Mr. Croker has sense enough not to let it turn his head. He has completely lived down the clouds that shrouded his name by the killing of McKenna some 20 years ago. Indeed it is now claimed by his friends that he did not fire the fatal shot at all. The trouble took place on election day at Thirty-fourth street and Second avenue.

A political fight was raging between Abram S. Hewitt and James O'Brien, who were pitted against each other in the race for congress. Croker was an advocate of Mr. Hewitt and worked hard for his election, and it having been reported that O'Brien's heelers were smashing the Hewitt ballot boxes he determined to stop it if possible. The two forces met at the polling precinct, and words between O'Brien and Croker led to blows, and blows to the fatal pistol shot. The case was tried, but the district attorney, becoming convinced that a conviction was impossible, allowed a nolle prosequi to be entered. It is still on file in the district attorney's office.

Mr. Croker as a Writer.

By the way, I have just heard an alleged true story of how Mr. Croker came to supply his article for The North American Review some time ago. A talented young journalist called upon Mr. Croker at the suggestion of the editor of The Review and asked him if he would supply an article upon Tammany Hall and its political methods. Mr. Croker pleasantly refused, and the young newspaper man engaged him in conversation for some time. He subsequently prepared a long article in defense of Tammany, and after having it neatly typewritten presented it to Mr. Croker and asked him if it met his views. The Tammany chieftain was pleased with the article and was free to say so. "Then," said the young journalist, "why will you not attach your name to it?"

The Tammany chieftain revised the paper carefully and finally put his name to it with some reluctance. It was then taken to the editor of The Review. A check for $100 was tendered Mr. Croker, but he promptly returned it and also gave his check for $100 to the young man who had defended Tammany so ably.

Robert Bonner's Orders.

I saw Robert Bonner riding in the park the other day behind a fast but not spirited stepper. He was going at a three minute clip, and he sat as erect and firm in his open carriage as though he were a young man of 20 instead of a veteran of 70. An old pressman told me this story about him not long ago:

"Before Bonner was wrapped up in fast horses and just as he had succeeded in getting The Ledger up to a circulation of 80,000 copies he was worried half to death for fear he could not hold it to those figures. I had charge of his pressroom. Bonner came down one day and said:

"'It seems to me that this cut on the fifth page works up too light. What do you think about it, Jim?'

"I thought it worked about right and told him so, but just to suit him I tried to fix it, remarking, 'If I work it any heavier, it will be one black botch.'

"'Well,' said he, sticking a lead pencil between his teeth and chewing it, as he always did when he got mad, 'if I tell you to make a black botch of it, you will do it, won't you?'

"'No, I won't,' I said.

"'Yes, you will,' he replied rather fiercely. 'If I tell you to run the whole fifth page bottom up, you'll do it.'

"I was mad clear through and said I would not make a fool of myself for him or anybody else.

"'We'll see,' said Bonner, and he took out a pencil and wrote an order on the fly leaf of a memorandum book for me to run the fifth page with the plate bottom up until I got other orders. Then he got out of the pressroom so quick that I had no time to file objections. Well, I put the plate on that way and ran it until the next day. He came down about noon.

"'Well, Jim,' he asked, 'how many have you run like this?'

"I looked at the counter. It showed 16,000, and I gave him the figures.

"'Suppose you change the plate back again, Jim,' he remarked, with a sickly smile, 'and hustle out the spoiled papers for old junk. I've seen a good many fools in my life, but only one bigger fool than a certain pressman I know.'

"'Maybe you saw him in the glass, Mr. Bonner,' I replied, kind of cautiouslike.

"He got out as quick as he could, and we never had another row after that."

AT THE METROPOLIS.

PANIC AND POLITICS IN NEW YORK'S PAST HISTORY.

The Money Has Returned to the Banks, but It Is Still Idle—World's Real Estate Convention—Encouraging Facts Cited From 1857.

NEW YORK CITY, Oct. 23.—[Special.]—"The panic is over, but liquidation is not." Such is the brief summary of the situation by the best judges, and their meaning is that, so far as the trouble was monetary the crisis is past, but now come the cleaning up and general clearing out of weak organizations. So the winter will be a hard one for the poor, and many will be without employment, and now we hear the usual cry: "Times are worse than ever before. This is the worst panic the country ever suffered."

It makes an old stager smile to hear these statements. The panic of 1857 was three times as bad as this by actual measurement. This is not a matter of opinion. It is a matter of plain figures. New York city was little more than a third as large as it now is, yet the unemployed 35 years ago were as numerous as today. Read the old files of the daily papers, and you will find accounts of long processions of desperate men demanding relief and threatening destruction. Early in November, 1857, representations were sent to Washington that there was imminent danger of an attack on the federal property in this city and a general "looting," and the regular troops were ordered to be in readiness to repel such an attack. Try to imagine a raid on federal property now!

Comptroller James H. Eckels says that since Oct. 31, 1892, but 157 national banks have suspended, with total capital of $30,400,000, and of these 83 have already resumed without any one's losing a dollar. In 1857 all the banks suspended, with very few and peculiar exceptions, and the losses to [illegible] were very many times greater [illegible]r. All the banks of Pennsyl[illegible]ded at once, and the legisla[illegible] of the governor, met Oct. 5 in [illegible]sion and authorized a continued suspension. Take the actual figures given in the New York papers, and you will see that not only was 1857 three times as bad as 1893, but 1873 was twice as bad as 1857, and 1837 was for awhile much worse than both of them together. The evil which now is always seems worse than the evil which is past.

Its Second Stage.

When they say the trouble is over, so far as it is monetary, they really mean that it has reached the second stage. In the first stage depositors rush to the banks and draw out their money. When it is seen that the banks do not fail, people reason, and very logically, too, that if they can stand such a rush as that they are impregnable, and so the money goes back. For a time there was a deficit; now the surplus reserve is enormous—about $40,000,000 in this city alone. But for the present the money is still idle. There is a curious analogy to that of a man in a convulsion; the blood rushes violently to the extremities, and the vital organs collapse; it rushes as violently back upon the heart, and there is congestion. The explanation is simple—the commercial world is advancing the use of credit much faster than it learns how to use it.

Real Estate Matters.

Politics feels it. The party out of power always gains in panic times. There has not been an exception since the panic of 1797. Only twice since 1836 has the party in power held its own at the congressional elections, midway between the presidential elections, and the off year following the election of the president is generally a very off year for the administration. Therefore, say the Republicans of this state—but everybody knows what they are saying.

The world's real estate congress is having a week's session at the Art institute in Chicago, and New York is well represented and intensely interested. This is among the last of those remarkable congresses which have been running concurrently with the World's fair, of which the parliament of religions was the most noted. The National Real Estate association inaugurated and will in a way direct this congress, and the experts of the real estate world will have some puzzling problems to solve.

Cost of Transportation.

It is a puzzle indeed that a rapid advance in science and civilization, a great cheapening in the cost of transportation and notable increase in population should go along with a rapid and continuous decline in real estate values in some of the most progressive nations. Yet such is the fact. British delegates declare that the actual cash value of farming lands in many parts of Great Britain has declined three-fifths within 25 years. This may be an exaggeration, but if it is half true there is cause for astonishment. In our cities and in their near vicinity there has been an advance, but everywhere else a decline, except in the new states.

It is worth noting that the very latest advices from Europe give us some light on this puzzle. The experts of Mark Lane and other produce centers have made up their summary of this year's wheat crop, and from it we see that India, which for a few years ago made its first experimental shipment, will this year export 42,500,000 bushels, while Argentina will export 26,000,000, Australia, 19,000,000, and other new countries in like proportions. Each of these exports more than the United States did in 1860. Since 1853 the world's production of wheat has increased 200 per cent, while the population has certainly not increased more than a third. Hence these tears.

A Redhot Campaign.

The supreme lodge of the Knights of Pythias has begun its session of a week at Richmond, and a special invitation has been extended to Federal soldiers to visit that city this week and look over the scenes made memorable during the war. The occasion should be one of pleasure and encouraging reflections, as the United States has now been at peace, Indian troubles aside, for a longer time than ever before. The visitors will also get home just in time for a redhot 10 days' campaign before the elections, which take place in 13 states on the 7th. If one may judge from this city's papers, no one is particularly interested in these elections except in Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Iowa and Virginia.

Wandering Arabs.

The Arab is essentially a wanderer, so it is not surprising to hear that nearly 4,500 people emigrated from the Lebanon last year, chiefly to Brazil. The population of the Lebanon does not amount to 300,000, so that, by the figures stated, about one-seventh of the people have left their native country. They do not settle abroad, their great object being to make as much money as they can in four or five years and then return to their native village.

Nervous Debility and Catarrh Cured.

Thomas Minchin says: "I was reduced to a nervous wreck—only weighed 118 pounds. The result of early abuse was the cause. I had the following symptoms: Miserable mentally and physically, melancholy, nervousness, weakness, specks before the eyes, dizzy, poor memory, palpitation of the heart, flushing, cold hands and feet, weak back, dreams and losses at night, tired in the morning, pimples on the face, loss of ambition, burning sensation, kidneys weak etc. Doctors could not cure me; but Drs. Blotches on the skin looked horrible. I tried sixteen doctors in all. A friend recommended Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. I began their New Method Treatment and in a few weeks was a new man with renewed life and ambition. I cannot say too much for those scientific doctors who have been in Detroit for fourteen years. because the alleged steel wheels put out by inexperienced manufacturers have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor. A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

☞ These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For $72 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO. 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

NOTES FROM THE WHITE CITY.

JACKSON PARK, Oct. 23, '93.

TO THE HERALD BOYS:—I fully resolved to send the HERALD a letter early last week, in time for Thursday's issue, but found it quite impossible to do so. Good resolutions are easily made here in Chicago and just as easily broken. I have no apology to make for my delinquency, except the fact that I was very busy every day, and "all tuckered out" when night came. However, I do not think the HERALD readers were losers by my negligence. You seem to have been been manufacturing local history at a two-forty gait during my absence, and the crimes and causalties were all portrayed in a plain, matter-of-fact style, which I conceive to be the proper method for a local newspaper. The HERALD was so much better than usual last week that it will be an inducement to me to leave home for a few days' recreation now and then.

In jotting down a few notes for this week's issue, I scarcely know where to begin. The fair itself has been pretty well written up in these columns during the past six months, and yet the fair will furnish an inexaustible mine for both pen and pencil and camera for many months to come. Descriptive articles can be best prepared at home form notes previously taken and hence I will confine this letter to a few items of personal mention and some personal experience which may be of interest to Tecumseh readers.

The outward trip was made without a "smash-up," thanks to a kind Providence, and our party arrived in Chicago about six o'clock p. m. We came out on Thursday's Wabash excursion train which contained about thirty people from Tecumseh, Ridgeway and Britton. The Lake Shore excursion train of the previous day brought over fifty people from Tecumseh alone. Consequently I found acquaintances here in goodly numbers during the past week. I made it a point to visit the Michigan building once every day, generally about noon, and never failed to find from one to half a dozen acquaintances, while I frequently stumbled upon some friend in other portions of the grounds, at the most unexpected times and places. These little personal interludes were among the most agreeable features of my present visit, and relieved the monotony of constant sight-seeing. One becomes weary in both mind and body after a day's association with strange scenes and strange faces.

The first day of my sojourn I spent in the city. It was a foggy morning and a drizzling day throngout—the same day of the awful smash-up at Jackson—but I made several business calls and found time to attend the theater in the evening. Neither age, gray hairs nor poverty seems to lessen the solid enjoyment I take in seeing a good play well rendered. Saturday I started for Jackson Park bright and early and put in a splendid day, devoting the whole day to the gallery of the main building, a section I had never visited before. Sunday I so far prevailed upon my conscience as to visit the Art Gallery, in company with my old friend L. F. Wheeler, and I found his professional knowledge exceedingly valuable in examining the paintings and statuary. I was very fortunate in meeting acquaintances that day. I found B. C. Knapp, Geo. Merritt, Will Bidwell and Chas. Pocklington at the Michigan. Also met Miss Allie and Jennie McCowen and Miss Jennie Root, in the Art Gallery. Monday forenoon I transacted some business in the city and took dinner at L. F. Wheeler's. I had the pleasure of meeting there Mr. Chas. F. Barnard, who was an inmate of Chas. T. Chapin's family years ago in Tecumseh. He has become quite a noted writer since then, and writes for about a dozen different magazines. He is rapidly gaining a place among the well known authors of the day, having already arrived at the point where his compositions are sought after. He is now deriving a good income from his pen, and he has brilliant prospects for a fine literary career. It was worth a trip to Chicago to form his acquaintance. Monday afternoon I again visited the fair in company with Mr. Wheeler. Invested in a hand camera, the latest and most improved style, called a Trokonet. Took Wheeler along to teach me the "thang of the barn," and we gave the machine a good start that afternoon. My thrilling and checquered experience, during the next three or four days, in snap-shot photography, would make a yellow covered novel. As my time to-day is limited, I must defer these camera trials and tribulations until some future occasion. I saw one of Wheeler's paintings in the Bauer piano section. It is a large sized landscape in colors, and attracted much attention and praise. He is giving his time now mostly to portrait painting in crayon and India ink, and has been driven with that kind of work for several months past. He does work for some of the largest portrait houses in Chicago. After many years of toil and struggle I am glad to know that he is gaining his merited position. On that day I met Mrs. Alonzo Clark, of Clinton, and Cash Mills of Macon. Tuesday there was a surprise in store for me, or rather several surprises. Upon going to the Michigan building at noon, I found brother George and his wife from Elgin, and Mrs. S. J. Walker of Brooklyn. Also met E. G. Cook and W. B. Keyser. Later I found Harry M. Bailey, who (it is permissible now to reveal the secret) is the "H. M. B." that writes the Jackson Park letter for the Herald. Mr. Bailey is a member of the Columbian Guard, stationed near the west end of the Midway. He formerly lived in Macon, and visits the Michigan building almost daily to find old acquaintances. While conversing with him I met Miss Satie Comfort, who showed me a clipping from the Chicago Tribune, giving a brief account of the racket at our house on the Saturday previous. Consternation can hardly express my feelings at the intelligence. I could not believe it. I regarded it as a hoax, but after worrying all that afternoon I hunted up the Free Press, upon returning to my hotel for supper and found the same news therein with fuller details. I then reluctantly came to the conclusion that it was only "too true."

As this letter has already exceeded its allotted space, I must take in sail. One day I met Editor Field in the French section of the main building. Among those whom I encountered afterwards, were Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Russell of Jackson; Miss Elvia Tallman, Miss Della Whitenack; Isaiah Hendershot of Macon; John Fisher and his daughter Ellen; Prof. E. A. Wilson, from Benton Harbor, who was there with two hundred of his school pupils; Mrs. Hettie Brewer and Mrs. Chas. Bidwell of Tecumseh; Miss Lillie Brown, who is now residing in Chicago. Yesterday I visited the grounds again with Mr. Wheeler, and I was somewhat surprised to encounter, right in the midst of the Midway, Messrs Hiteshu, J. A. Boyd, Met Conklin, Newberry Satterthwaite and Attorney John Bird, and the three Moreland brothers of Adrian. I have'nt recovered from the shock yet, and hence will close this rambling missive without further parley. Keep the HERALD right side up with care. You can expect me home when I arrive.

Disaster on the Grand Trunk Road Near Battle Creek.

A TERRIBLE BLUNDER.

BATTLE CREEK, Oct 21.—An eastbound special train from Chicago collided with train No. 9, the Pacific express, going west, at 3:52 o'clock Friday morning in the yards of the Chicago & Grand Trunk railway. Twenty-seven persons were killed and burned and thirty-five injured. Two of the Pacific express coaches were telescoped and three burned. The express was made up of thirteen coaches and from the remains of coach No. 18 twenty-five charred bodies were taken. The accident was a mile and a half from the city fire station. The imprisoned passengers were burned with the wreckage, while scores of people stood about unable to lend any assistance. Most of the bodies recovered are formless cinders.

The train crew on the special, it is said, disobeyed orders in passing Nichols station, where there were orders to wait on a siding for the Pacific express. No element of horror was absent from the scenes about the wreck. In the great crash the seats in the flimsy day coaches closed up like an accordion. So the imprisoned passengers were burned. Many of the charred remains will never be identified.

Following will be found a list of the known dead:

Miss A. Worthman, of New York city; James G. Worthman, her 12-year-old brother, New York city; J. B. Beardslee, Watkins, N. Y.; Mrs. F. R. McKinzie, Portage, Wis.; William W. Henry, East Greenwich, N. Y.; Edwin I. Magoon, Watrick, R. I.; Albert Bradley, Simcoe, Ont.; Mrs. Albert Bradley, Simcoe, Ont.; Thomas R. Stringer, Port Dover, Ont.; Frank H. Smith, Port Plain, N. Y., leg amputated and since died; Charles C. Van Dusen, Sprout Brook, N. Y., died from injuries; Mrs. Charles Van Dusen, Sprout Brook, N. Y.; Thomas A. McGarvey, London, Ont.

In addition to this list there are fourteen unidentified bodies, in some cases so badly burned that even the sex cannot be determined. The injured number thirty-five, and their wounds are of all degrees of seriousness.

The wreck occurred at a place called Nichols, otherwise the yards and roundhouse of the Chicago & Grand Trunk road, in the west part of town. There is only one main track running past the shanty called Nichols, and upon this track, right at the depot, the two trains met with terrible force. One was a Raymond & Whitcomb special, full of passengers returning from the world's fair and going to their homes in New York and Boston. Conductor Burt Scott, of this city, had charge and the engineer was an old employe named Henry Wooley. The Pacific express was made up of thirteen old coaches, bound for Chicago. John Burk was conductor and Gil Cranshaw engineer.

Conductor Scott and Engineer Wooley, of the Raymond and Whitcomb special, received orders to meet at Nichols No. 9, the Pacific express going to Chicago. Practically the same orders were given to the trainmen of the Pacific express. This train was due at 1:35 a. m., but was nearly three hours late. The disobedience of orders upon the part of one crew, if not both, caused the trains to leave the double track here and meet upon the single track in the company's yards.

When the trains met in the deadly crash the Pacific express was going at the rate of 30 miles an hour and the special was somewhat slower, though Engineer Wooley says that he had stopped. The engineers and firemen when they saw a collision was inevitable shut off steam, reversed engines, put on brakes, and all jumped and escaped without serious injury.

Then the crash came. The two engines were driven into each other and wrecked, the one on the express being a new Cook engine in use two weeks. The people in the crowded cars were sleeping at the time (3:40 o'clock), and everything was dark with the exception of the switchlights and the headlights of yard locomotives. Of the special train the engine and baggage car were wrecked, but the coaches, being sleepers and the train moving slowly, escaped serious injury and no one on this train was injured.

The shock dazed while it woke the occupants of the cars. Then came the shrieks of the injured and the moans of those more seriously hurt. Willing hands pressed forward, and in the darkness hands were torn as pieces of wreckage were struggled with in the efforts of the rescuers to release some man or woman or child pinned down in the wreckage. There was little light at first.

The spark soon became a light, then a fire, small at first and needing only a bucket of water to quench it, but rapidly increasing in brilliancy as it fed upon the highly varnished wood above. No kindlings could have been better placed. Then the fire became fierce as it formed its own draft and crept upward towards the victims in waiting. There was no water, nothing to quench the red fury, and soon the neighboring farmhouses could be seen, the light was so great. The fire soon became a great white furnace, devouring men, women and children, and melting iron and warping wheels of cars, and when the fire department attempted to quench it the water sizzled as it struck the red-hot iron and went up in steam. The blaze was seen for miles around.

The death of Mrs. C. C. Van Dusen was very sad. She had got partially out of the car, but her feet had been caught and held her fast by the timbers and there she burned to death. Her agony was terrible, but she retained her senses to the last and gave her name and address and told what friends to notify. She was a teacher in the Methodist Sunday school and died like a Christian. Her husband, Charles Van Dusen, died at the Nichols Memorial home at 10 o'clock.

In the only two faces recognizable in the morgue all the nameless horrors of death by fire were stamped. One body lacked a limb, another an arm; eyes had gone from sockets, ears and noses had been licked off by the flames. Two of the bodies might have been but charred stumps of trees for all the evidences that remained that they were human beings but a few hours ago.

Engineer Wooley and Conductor Scott, of train No. 6, were arrested on warrants charging criminal negligence, and placed under bonds of $3,000 each to await the action of the coroner's jury. Wooley acknowledges receiving an order to wait for No. 9 on the double tracks, but says Scott told him that the train had already gone through and accordingly he pulled onto the main line and almost immediately ran into No. 9. He is heart-broken over the affair. The jury impaneled by the coroner has caused much dissatisfaction among citizens, so that the first jury has been discharged, and a new one called. The first jury contained the names of F. H. Lotta and George Meacham, the former of whom is a brother-in-law of Division Superintendent McIntyre, of the Grand Trunk railroad, and the latter is a member of a firm of lawyers employed by the Michigan Central. The people, wishing to avoid all appearance of collusion, desired these names recalled.

LANSING, Mich., Oct. 23.—Railroad Commissioner Billings is going to order an investigation of the Battle Creek disaster at once, with special reference to the question as to what set the cars on fire. He thinks the car stove is largely responsible for the terrible loss of life. The statutes of the state provide that railroad companies are to heat their cars by generating the heat for warming them outside and independent of said cars or by the use of heaters in the cars, so constructed that in case of accident it will be practically impossible for the fire to escape from the stove or heater so as to set fire to the cars.

What is spoken of in advance as a particularly clever and entertaining novel, "The Burden of Isabel," will be published in a few days by Messrs. Harper & Brothers as a number in their "Franklin Square Library." Its author is J. Maclaren Cobban, a successful writer of fiction in England. The book has a serious undercurrent—filial sacrifice—but its lighter elements are said to be treated with much humor, especially in dealing with a tricky Hindoo domestic, whose rogueries give to the story the movement of a strong drama.

Wm. A. Johnson, Deputy Grand Regent of the Royal Arcanum, made a visit last week to Tecumseh Council, No. 634. He expressed himself as very much pleased with the attendance and interest manifested by the members. Also at the increase in membership amounting to over 25 per cent since Jan. 1st. The grocers began their 8 o'clock closing scheme Monday night, and it is amusing to see the look of surprise which comes over the face of some late customer when he bangs up against a grocery door and it fails to yield. Then he looks all around to see if any one saw him and swears softly to himself.

The electric railway scheme seems to be an assured thing. The Adrian street railway people it is understood, have a deal in hand which will be completed to-day, whereby the Adrian road passes into the possession of the Thompson-Houston company, who will make the extension to this place, and from here to Clinton, Saline and Ypsilanti.

Numerous stories are afloat concerning the finding of stolen property at the residence of Mrs. Alice Church. Of these enough are true but in many cases the tales are mere fabrications. That Mrs. D. L. Whitenack had recovered a gold watch which was stolen last winter, also that the Episcopal church carpet had been found, are a sample pair which are untrue according to Deputy Sheriff Stevens. Mr. Stevens is in possession of descriptive receipts from fourteen persons who have identified property belonging to them. The affair has assumed considerable magnitude in the last few days and it looks as though the purloining had been going on for a number of years.

The T. H. S. eleven and the City eleven met yesterdny p. m., on Bills' race track for their second game of foot ball. The first half was within three minutes of completion with no points made, and the T. H. S. were within ten yards of the city goal, when a loose play gave the city the ball and a clear run. Their right End Rush had it out with the High School Full Back and made a touchdown while the other players were heaped together in one pile nursing the fond delusion that the ball was somewhere under them. In the second half, at a time when carelessness gave the High School an advantage, one of their men fouled the ball and the opportunity was lost. Just as darkness came on the City made another touchdown. Points, City 8; T. H. S. 0.

A NEW LECTURE SCHEME.

The latest plan devised by Chautauqua consists in sending lectures, syllabuses and all other materials to such centers as desire local lectures but are as yet unable to afford the expense of a lecturer. The Chautauqua extension lectures are arranged in courses of six lectures each and are furnished in printed or mimeographed form. Local ministers, school teachers and others are secured to read them and questions for discussion at the close of each lecture are suggested in the syllabus, a copy of which is given to every ticket holder. Nearly seventy courses were given last winter with only one set of lectures, and so satisfactory were the results that five courses are now offered.

The new plan of read lectures devised by the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle includes five valuable courses in the following lines: Social Science, by Prof. A. W. Small, Head Professor of Sociology in the University of Chicago, a course treating of many of the pressing social questions of the times; Prophecies concerning the Fall of Jerusalem, by Dr. William R. Harper, the well known Biblical specialist; Mediaeval History and Art, by Prof. Wm. H. Goodyear, of the Brooklyn Institute, this course accompanied by an illustrated syllabus; The Poetry and teaching of Robert Browning, and Greek Social Life, by professor Owen Seaman, a graduate of Cambridge, England. Communities which cannot afford the expense of a lecturer are particularly fortunate to be able to secure such courses without financial risk.

I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to all sufferers from dry catarrh from personal experience.—Michael Herr, Pharmacist, Denver, Col.

I had catarrh of the head and throat for five years. I used Ely's Cream Balm and from the first application I was relieved. The sense of smell, which had been lost, was restored after using one bottle. I have found the Balm the only satisfactory remedy for catarrh and it has effected a cure in my case.—H. L. OMENS OF TROUBLE.

SENATOR BRICE SAYS WE ARE ON THE EVE OF A GREAT BATTLE.

A Rather Lugubrious Prophecy by One of the Keenest Observers In Public Life. Are the Old Parties Breaking Up?—A Dark Outlook.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 26.—[Special.]—Senator Brice of Ohio was asked by your correspondent for his views on the political and financial outlook. "In my opinion," replied Senator Brice, "we are upon the eve of an era of financial agitation in this country. I believe the tariff and all other issues will be overshadowed by the currency question. How long it will take to reach a settlement of this problem I do not pretend to say, but I should not be surprised if for a number of years to come our political parties and campaigns were to be ranged and fought upon one or the other side of the financial issue. The battle which we fought in Ohio and other western states from 1868 to 1876 for and against fiat money and an inflated currency must now, with some variations, be fought over again.

"The field of battle has been transferred from Ohio and Indiana to the states farther west and south. Both of the old political parties are sure to suffer heavy losses when this issue is forced to the front to the exclusion of old questions. The third or Populist party is already a formidable factor in those sections of the country, and it will soon become a positive force in our government. The silver fight which we have just had in the senate is only the preliminary skirmish. I said a week ago that it was a pity to waste so much time and strength in settling our little battle in the senate chamber, because it was at best only an exchange of shots between pickets, and that the great armies would not come together for some time yet. I see no reason to change my opinion.

How the People Are Dividing.

"Rightly or wrongly," continued Senator Brice, "millions upon millions of poor people believe silver to be the money of the masses, and that any attempt to strike it down is a blow at them and their prosperity. These people, who are as honest and sincere a people as there are in the country, think Wall street a den of robbers, every bank an enemy to mankind and every corporation or industrial concern a menace to popular liberty. It does no good for us who believe otherwise to denounce these people or to ridicule them. They and their belief exist, and they are making their power manifest in numerous ways. We must face the conditions as we find them.

"It is apparent to me that the coming winter is to be one of the severest ever experienced in the United States. Times are to be hard, employment scarce, wages low. I expect to see stocks selling much lower than they were on the 29th day of last July, when they reached their lowest point during the panic. I expect to see real estate in New York and other great cities fairly a drug in the market. Men who need money will offer real estate for sale, and no one will want to buy it even at sacrifice figures, for few people will have the ready money with which to purchase or the moral courage necessary to go out and borrow it from their friends.

"Even in Chicago, after the World's fair is over and the numerous hotels and the other enterprises that have been in operation there on account of the exposition are closed, I expect to see great suffering and commercial prostration. These conditions will prevail more or less through the country, in my judgment, for many months to come. The panic is over, but liquidation will go on. Men are hard run for money; credit is at a low ebb; new industries are scarce; old ones are retrenching expenses; contracts for the future are limited in number and importance.

Only the Skirmish.

"Having all these things in mind, I have urged upon my colleagues in the senate that perhaps it was not necessary for us to break our backs in order to effect unconditional repeal of the Sherman act. We were at best only the skirmishers of the coming great battle, which is to stir the country from center to circumference, recast parties, strike down leaders and build up new men. More than that, considering repeal as a Democratic measure, I could see both advantage and disadvantage that might accrue from it. If we were to leave the Sherman law undisturbed and these hard times followed, responsibility therefore would have been put upon our shoulders because we had failed to effect repeal, but if we did pass repeal and the hard times still went on, as they would be sure to do, our responsibility perhaps would not be so great, and we would have lost the opportunity to have done something further than mere repeal for the relief of the country. I confess that for one, while I have always favored unconditional repeal, my mind has been more or less troubled by doubts as to whether or not that was all we should do in the present emergency."

Are Parties to Break Up?

It is a matter of common gossip in the higher political circles of the capital that a breaking up of all parties to a greater or less extent is inevitable in the near future. There are in Washington eminent Republicans who think the new states which they brought into the Union in the far west are about to drift from their allegiance to the Republican party and give aid and comfort to the Populists in the coming presidential and congressional contests. In the south and southwest leading Democrats think their party is to suffer similarly. If these predictions all prove to be well founded, the Populist party, which now has a representation in congress of seven members of the lower house and three or four in the upper, may congratulate itself upon its rapidly improving prospects.

Populists May Hold the Balance of Power.

It is not at all improbable if these prophets know whereof they speak that in the next congress the Populists may hold the balance of power in one or both branches of congress. When that day comes, legislation will be even more difficult than it is at the present time when the senate of the United States is at the mercy of minorities. If the Populists obtain the balance of power, they will be pretty sure to use it for the advancement of their peculiar ideas concerning finance, currency and banking. It is evident from the remarks of Senator Brice quoted above and the similar beliefs held by other prominent men that the country is upon the eve of a most interesting and important political era.

Even in the east this question of the currency is likely to upset party calculations, because the party which stands most valiantly for what is called hard money will be likely to receive the support of many men who have heretofore belonged to the other party, while another class of the people will be driven to change their party from the opposite motive. At any rate, it is well to bear in mind the prophecy uttered by Mr. Brice, who is one of the keenest observers in public life.

What More Could Mortal Ask?

Avoiding Offense.

Jimson—I say, old boy, come in and take pot-luck with me to-day.

Billson (who has tried Jimson's pot-luck before)—Um—really, I'd be delighted, but—er—important matter to attend to.

Jimson—Oh, nonsense. Business is duller than a country church yard—nothing going on at all.

Billson—Yes—er—of course—business can wait, of course; but this is—er—a domestic matter, you know.

Jimson—Get out! Your folks are out of town, and I know it.

Billson (in desperation)—Yes, that's so; but my—er—mother-in-law doesn't leave until to-day, and I want to go to—er—the railway station and kiss her good-by.—N. Y. Weekly.

A Forward Cat.

Little Ethel—I don't like the way my Kitty acts. She jumps up into everybody's lap an' purrs jus' as she does with me.

Mother—You shouldn't want her to be ugly to strangers, would you?

Little Ethel—N-o, but she needn't be quite so 'fectionate before she is introduced, anyhow.—Good News.

A SURE THING.

Justice (to diminutive prisoner)—There is no use your denying that you assaulted the policeman and that you were drunk.

Diminutive Prisoner (pointing to gigantic policeman)—Is that the cop I struck, your honor?

Justice—Yes.

Diminutive Prisoner—Then I must have been blind drunk.—Judge.

A Troublesome Division.

Mother—Here, son, is a cake for you and your brother. Divide it equally.

Son—Why do they make cakes with holes in the middle, mamma?

Mother—Just to look pretty, I suppose. Don't you like them so?

Son—Yes'm, they're good enough, only I wish I had to divide with somebody that could eat the holes.—Harper's Young People.

Railroad Rumble.

"What time," asked a lady with an armful of bundles, "does the next train leave?"

"It leaves on schedule time," responded the affable and accommodating ticket agent.

Unmistakable.

"I saw a man laughing at a joke of mine in a comic paper last week," said Hicks.

"How did you know it was your joke he laughed at?"

"How did I know? Why, because mine was the only good joke in the whole darned sheet; that's how!"—Puck.

A Valuable Pointer.

Young Man—A friend in the south has sent me a quantity of very fine liquor, but writes that it is too new to drink yet. How long do you think it ought to be kept?

Old Man—Keep it until you are rich enough to live without work.—Good News.

Sympathy.

"Lushforth and his wife are so sympathetic a couple."

"Aren't they, though? The other morning I had occasion to call there early and Lushforth was looking rocky while his wife had a stony stare. I never saw such perfect sympathy."—Indianapolis Journal.

One That Wasn't.

Mr. Howell (of the firm of Gettup & Howell)—Are the bank statements more favorable to-day, Mr. Addemup?

Bookkeeper—Why—aw—not exactly. Here's one to the effect that you've overdrawn your account at the Fourteenth national.—Chicago Tribune.

Wasted Energy.

Ethel—Emma's awfully put out.

Elaine—What's the matter?

Ethel—Why she went to the trouble of making a fearful fuss over a little mouse and come to find out there wasn't a man near to look at her.—Chicago Record.

What He Wanted.

Dealer—This ring for three dollars is plated, but it is warranted for five years.

A HOME MISSIONARY.

JOSEPH ADDISON HALLOCK (Octogenarian.)

HIS EXPERIENCE WITH THE OWEN ELECTRIC BELT.

AN OLD MAN WITH PROGRESSIVE IDEAS AND HIS DESIRE TO ENLIGHTEN THE PUBLIC.

The winter of 1884-85 was my first experience with rheumatism. I was traveling as a home missionary, and with great difficulty and suffering I reached my appointments. It was located in my hips and back. From that time to this year of grace, 1891, I have suffered more or less under the grip of that disease. About three years later, liver complaint, and the calomel taken to cure it, fastened upon the walls and organs of my chest, a rheumatic affection from which I was never wholly free, and at times even a breath was a cruelty. Yet, in a general way, my health has been as good, perhaps better than the average of men.

During the last days of the latter, I bought of Dr. Owen two of the Owen Electric Belts. One I have worn, the other my daughter has worn. In either case the remedial has been satisfactory. The rheumatism of my chest and hips I can no longer find. A limited case of varicocele, of more than thirty years standing, after two weeks' use of the Belt, has diminished to a mere lump, and a few days later could not be found. A nasal catarrh of years had so affected the substance of the nose that a friend in jest twitted me of brandy. My nose is itself again, and other symptoms of nasal and throat catarrh are fast disappearing, carrying my deafness of seven years with them.

I have studied electricity in its bearings upon mental and physico mental phenomena for fifty years, and have seen its wonders in these directions, and, thus prepared, my attention was easily turned to its efficiency in controlling the nerves, muscles and motions of the living, as galvanism does those of the recent dead.

I have no wish to undervalue any appliance which carries a real electric current from a genuine battery to human nerves with a gentle, a genial force; but I do wish to do my utmost to disarm public fears as to the well-ordered Electric Belts.

TWO DAYS ONLY.

CONSULTATION AND EXAMINATIONS FREE

If you are interested in the condition of your eyes, call on the noted Dr. Galleher He is an expert in his profession. Eyesight is precious—more valuable than any other of the special senses. The Docter has treated in the last 12 months more than 3,500 cases of all forms of eye trouble and errors of refractions, such as Glaucoma, Ulceration of the Cornea, Granulation of the lids, Presbyopia, Paralysis of Accomodation, Spasm of Accomodation, Hypermetrobia, Aphakia, Myopia, Astigmatism, Anisometropia, Strabismus, Diplopia, Asthenopia, etc. Have you ever stopped to think how many people in this world are blind from their own negligence and carelessness in not giving their eyes attention at the proper time? You now have the opportunity of consulting one who gives all his time in treating cronic eye trouble. Thousands of persons in this world that do not use glasses that should, then again there are thousands of persons using gasses they think suited to their eyes, but the truth of the matter is, the glasses do not correct the trouble, but aggravate it and produce headache, spots before the eyes, inflamation, granulation, winking, trembling spells, various nerve and brain affections, catracts, burning and smarting of the eyes, etc.; entailing not only positive injury to the sight, but untold misery and blindness. Dr. Galleher makes examinations that few in this country can make. He has instruments with which he can examine every muscle and fibre in the inside of the eye. He can tell you in an instant after examining your eyes whether he can benefit you or not, and will truthfully say so. It should be understood that Dr. Galleher is well known throughout the Eastern States as a practical and successful electrician. He invented some of the finest electrical appliances ever imported to this country. Remember that Dr Galleher does not give one drop of medicine. He is the only man in America who has the exclusive sale of Dr. Edgar Scott's Positive Catarrh Cure. An instrument put up of compressed and medicated gasses, which is Dr. S's. own invention. Dr. Galleher also has appliances which will remove a tape worm in from two to four hours or no charges made Testimonals of the best people in this country at his room at the hotel. Call early and secure convenient hours for free consultation and examination.

E. L. German has been quite ill since his return from the World's fair, having taken a severe cold while in Chicago.

Mrs. D. W. Love and Miss Campbell spent Sunday with friends in Franklin. Miss Nora Love has been quite ill since her return from Chicago, but is now on the gain and able to sit up and walk about the house.

A great deal is said now-a-days about people hiding money in old stockings and out of the way places, and they are often counseled to put it in bank and help to restore confidence in banking and mercantile concerns, but judging from the tenor of the opinions expressed, with regard to the Gibbs-Bills affair there will be more money hoarded now, than ever before in this region. A great deal of sympathy for Mr. Gibbs, and strong indignation for the methods of men, who recklessly speculate with the property of widows and orphans, and, then by a legal quibble escape merited punishment.

A horse was lost last Saturday night under very similar circumstances. A man was driving home (to Springville) from Adrian, with a horse tied behind his carriage. The moon had not risen and it was quite dark, but looking back now and then he saw the horse, as he supposed following all right, but discovered, after a while that it was a horse and carriage close behind him, and that his horse had gone no one knew where, and Sunday night no clue had yet been found to the missing equine. The animal was black, quite valuable, and it is thought that perhaps he has been spirited away by theives.

Saturday, Oct. 21st. 1893, a beautiful autumn day, will be long and pleasantly remembered by our worthy townspeople, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hendryx, as the sixty-fifth anniversary of their marriage-day, and also because a large company of friends and relatives assembled at their home to surprise them with a pleasant reminder of their kind wishes. It is seldom given to husband and wife to journey together, so long and as they draw near to the sunset of life, may they find the way smoothed and made pleasant by loving hands of sons and daughters, and when their summons comes to depart, may their passing be like his "who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

It seems very odd to us but the young lady from the south, after inspecting the operations of a threshing machine with wonder, took with her to her home samples of wheat to show to the many people there who never saw wheat before.

Lawrence Herbison received the following telegram last week: Joseph Herbison is dead. Will be buried Monday. Signed, W. J. Herbison. The deceased was a son of Hugh Herbison, who died in Salt Lake City several years ago, and a grandson of the late Joseph and Hannah Herbison, of Franklin. He was the oldest of four children and was born in Salt Lake City Aug. 11th., 1875. He died Oct. 27, at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Frank Pease, in Owosso, Mich., of typhoid fever, after an illness of one month. "Jo." was always a bright and kindly natured lad and his early death comes as a shock to those who knew him well and who sympathize deeply with those who will so sorely miss and mourn him.

The Frink—Smith Wedding.

Absence from home is our only excuse for the delay in making mention of the Frink-Smith wedding, which occurred in Adrian, on Wednesday the 18th of October. The bride has been a frequent visitor at Tecumseh, in years past, and has many warm friends here who will tender their congratulations on this happy occasion. We are indebted to the Press for the following notice of the affair:

Wednesday, at Christ church, were united in marriage by Rev. C. H. Channer, Miss Cora C. Smith, and A. Chas. Frink, of Marshall.

The wedding was one of more than ordinary interest to the Press, as the fair bride is the only daughter of E. J. Smith, the editor of this paper, and a most winsome, attractive and intelligent young lady whose rare qualities of heart and mind, and whose many womanly attributes, have won her a warm place in the hearts of those who best know her.

The groom is a young man of sterling character, and for many years has held a responsible position in the U. S. railway mail service, discharging his duties with a fidelity that commands the approval of all his superiors. He is a grandson of Judge Abner Pratt, and son of the late Judge Frink who was for several years probate judge of Calhoun county.

The ceremony was performed at the church at 12 o'clock, Miss Jennie Buck presiding at the organ and rendering very skillfully the inspiring wedding march, as the happy pair advanced to the alter, to take the vows that united them for life. The ceremony was entirely private, only the immediate relatives being present.

A tempting and delicious breakfast was served at the Hotel Emery, at 2 o'clock, and from three till half past four, an informal reception was held in the hotel parlors, where many friends of Mr. Smith and of the bride as well, paid their respects. They took the Wabash flyer for Detroit and will spend the early days of their married life at the Columbian Exposition. Their home will be in Detroit. We extend to both, the most sincere congratulations and trust that "Blest be the bride, whom the sun shines upon," will be fully exemplified in this case, by long years of happiness, usefulness and prosperity.

A MAN IN PETTICOATS

THE QUEER NOTION OF AN OLD SOLDIER CITIZEN OF MAINE.

He Has a More Costly Feminine Wardrobe Than Any Woman in Town—Visions of Lace, Ruffles, Etc.—Weighs 180 Pounds, but Wears a Woman's No. 6 Shoe.

Commander James Robbins of the local post G. A. R., Cooper's Mills, Lincoln county, in this state, is one of the prominent men of his community, a citizen generally esteemed as a man of integrity and intelligence. Mr. Robbins has a brilliant war record as a member of the Thirtieth Maine. He has lived in the village since 1883 and is a jeweler. His house is a neat cottage house on the brow of the hill as one drives into the Mills. In the narrow front hallway is Mr. Robbins' bench, lathe and tools, and here you will find him placidly working away at the tiny wheels and springs.

If you are on sufficiently intimate terms with Mr. Robbins you will find him indulging in his hobby. He has one, like the most of us. In his case the hobby is startlingly picturesque, and it may be safely said that he is the most original man in the state of Maine, so far as his curious fancy is concerned. He wears petticoats. Not when he goes down street for the mail and to do his marketing. At these times he slips on the masculine pantaloons. Yet he does not wear his trousers, even, like ordinary masculinity. No suspenders for him. He wears a sort of dress waist, and his trousers are buttoned tightly about his hips. He always wears a woman's number six shoe, with high heels and graceful, slender shape. Mr. Robbins weighs something like 180 pounds, and the effect produced by those shoes peeping coyly out from beneath manly trouser legs is startling, to say the least. Mr. Robbins doesn't mince or toddle, and his shoes seem to fit him pretty well.

He reserves his petticoats for the sanctity of the home circle, for the partial retirement of his orchard and for calls upon neighbors with whom his acquaintance is close. Mr. Robbins isn't squeamish about showing himself in petticoats. He enjoys wearing them, he has worn them when opportunity has presented all his life long, and he wears them scientifically too. In the first place, there's no half way business about it. Every detail of feminine attire is there, and Mr. Robbins is rightly fussy about the details.

There is no woman in Cooper's Mills who owns so many dresses of such excellent material as does the commander of the Cooper's Mills post. He takes pride in having only the best. His lingerie is elaborately tucked and ruffled, edged with lace and fashioned according to the most approved models of any lady's wardrobe. The material is of the finest quality, and when Mr. Robbins lifts his skirts the eye gets a vision of ruffles, lace and "all such like" of dazzling whiteness and immaculate smoothness.

He is very particular about his ironing. Everything must be starched "up to the handle," whatever that is, and sometimes Mrs. Robbins finds her hands full and her clotheshorse loaded down like a pack donkey. Amazed neighbors, who were not fully aware of the extent of Mr. Robbins' hobby, have been obliged to ask for more details, when Mrs. Robbins has laconically informed them that "it is Jim's ironing." Mr. Robbins' hosiery is of the long sort, and it is currently rumored that the stockings are hitched up at the sides. His corsets he has made especially for his girth, and these he wears continually. His shape is fairly good, especially when he dresses up for afternoons.

In the morning he wears print gowns, for he assists in the housework. Almost every morning Mr. Robbins in his print gown is seen sweeping off the piazza and whisking about the kitchen. He wears petticoats at home almost exclusively, putting on his garb as soon as he enters the house. For afternoon wear his gowns are elaborate. Some of them are made by Mr. Robbins, and some are fashioned by local dressmakers. One cashmere dress is quite a favorite, and this is frequently worn by Mr. Robbins when he promenades in the orchard. He has lots of these good clothes, all of fashionable cut, puffed sleeves, and with all the fixings that go to lend grace and dignity. Usually he wears an apron and especially so when at his bench. The apron is white ordinarily and has a bib with ruffled straps and pockets. Therefore does Mr. Robbins present a somewhat unique appearance as he works away of afternoons or sits and converses with his wife.

Look at the gown and you see a stylishly attired woman, but the face is very mannish indeed. Mr. Robbins would be marked in any crowd. His face is full, and he wears a jet black mustache that possibly owes its color to art. His hair is long, black and curly, his voice is deep and full, and there's nothing effeminate about him except his attire.—Lewiston Journal.

Soapstone In China.

The Chinese in utilizing soapstone, which is found in their country in large quantities, make of it trays for pens, slabs for rubbing ink, flower vases, incense boxes, sandal wood burners, flower baskets, candlesticks, chessmen, cups, bowls and lamps, all sorts of emblems, animals and the idols which the disciples of Confucius revere with so much favor.

A Hard Problem.

A BALLAD OF LIGHT HOUSEKEEPING.

'Tis a subtly sweet suggestive phrase,
But the simple soul who is lured thereby
Will make a sorrow for many days.
In secret oft will he moan and cry
And vote the thing a tremendous lie,
For it means, this phrase that sounds so fair,
A world of trouble and toil and care
And a wild distracting wish to go
Away from it soon and anywhere,
I speak of the things whereof I know.

It means all little transparent ways
To hide away from the common eye
The fact that your bread and butter stays
In your desk; that you bake and boil and fry
In a single dish. It means to try
To hang your garments, the best you wear,
In a folding bed, that last despair
Of honest souls; and, bitterest blow,
It means a kitchenette parlor air.
I speak of the things whereof I know.

It means to shrink 'neath the stern amaze
Of the lordly butcher's and baker's eye,
Apologizing in meek dispraise
For your modest wants. To rave or sigh
Over the pangs of the boughten pie,
'Tis to pray a strong, heav'n reaching prayer
For the meal a man pronounces "square,"
And to be once more in life below
Free from that peace destroying snare,
I speak of the things whereof I know.

ENVOY.

Ye who have tempted this life to share,
Pause ere ye enter the tiger's lair;
Consider the truth I fain would show.
For with hand on heart I firmly swear
I speak of the things whereof I know.
—Carlotta Perry.

A Mother's Way.

When the Rev. Horace Bushnell was a boy, he was very desirous of knowing something about music. No one in the family could teach him, however, and his mother, with that divine patience and insight which belong to mothers in general, found that if the lad was to have his wish at all it must be through her. She obtained a book and soon taught him all she knew—the scale, the keynote and how to find it, and the time of the notes.

This was only "book learning," however, and the question was to adapt it to the use of the voice. Little Horace wanted to sing by note, and that his mother could not teach him. She could sing by ear, however, and the two hit upon a species of reverse process. The mother sang familiar tunes, and the boy watched the notes, observing how the intervals and time ran along, and, as he expressed it, "soon began almost to sing with us."

And from singing airs they knew into notes that bore no meaning they finally learned to sing airs they did not know out of similar notation. The method had been unlocked, and further progress was easy. The mother's heart had found out the way.—Youth's Companion.

A City of Roof Gardens.

The majority of the houses in Buenos Ayres have but one story, whose flat roof serves all the purposes of Yankee lawns and door yards. While the patios are frequently utilized as dining and sitting rooms, it is the universal custom to promenade in the cool of the day on the housetops, to sit there at morning and evening enjoying the refreshing breezes, extensive views and varied panorama in the street below. The children find their favorite playground on the roof. There the nurses bring their infant charges, the seamstress her sewing and the maid her mistress' bedraggled finery to put in order again. The clothes are dried and aired and ironed atop, and during the "heated term" of this dewless latitude thousands bring up their beds and sleep with starry sky for a counterpane.—Philadelphia Record.

Too Sweeping.

After his return from his first lecturing tour in this country, the late Matthew Arnold visited old Mrs. Proctor, the widow of the poet, "Barry Cornwall," and mother of Adelaide Proctor. Mrs. Proctor, who was then 80 years old, in giving Mr. Arnold a cup of tea asked him:

"And what did they say about you in America?"

"Well," replied the literary autocrat, "they said I was conceited, and they added that my clothes did not fit me."

"Well, now," retorted the old lady, "I think they were mistaken about the clothes."—New York Mail and Express.

Chattel Mortgages.

A man who gives a chattel mortgage should always examine it carefully to make sure it is not "on demand." Sharp money lenders who loan funds on chattel mortgages often try to have this clause inserted, and when it is the borrower may expect to part with his chattels at almost any moment. It is a trick by which advantage is often taken of the unwary.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ON A GRAVE CHARGE.

Arrest of Nelson Bradley, a Prominent Lansing Man.

Charged with Making False Reports and Misappropriating a Large Sum of Money While Cashier of the Central Michigan Bank.

IN CUSTODY.

LANSING, Oct. 26.—This city was thrown into great excitement at noon Wednesday by the arrest of Nelson Bradley, cashier of the Central Michigan savings bank that last April went into the hands of a receiver. The complaint is a criminal one and was made by Bank Commissioner Sherwood, who charges Bradley with knowingly misreporting under oath the condition of the bank shortly after its failure. Bradley reported overdrafts, notes, etc., at about $34,000, when the amount should have been over $160,000. This, it is claimed, was done for the purpose of covering up a systematic series of speculations and false bank entries, covering a period of years. Bradley has been considered one of the most honorable business men in the state. The irregularities in his accounts were not unearthed until a week or so ago, when the receivers, aided by Bradley's old clerks, began to uncover his dishonesty.

George W. Stone, receiver for the bank, says the false report is not the worst feature of the matter. He and his assistants recently completed an examination of the books of the bank and found that Bradley had been misappropriating funds for over nine years, during which time he invested $52,000 of bank money in his own name. Bradley demanded an examination when arraigned and gave bail for his appearance November 8.

Nelson Bradley has been a resident of Lansing for nearly twenty years. He became cashier fourteen years ago. He came to this city almost without a cent and is now rated at something like $200,000. He was most assiduous in attending to his duty, being at the bank early and late, and everybody had the utmost confidence in him. The maximum penalty for making a false report is twenty years' imprisonment.

A PLACE FOR UHL.

Grand Rapids Man One of the Candidates for Assistant Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 30.—Secretary of State Gresham was asked Sunday night about the report that Edwin F. Uhl, of Grand Rapids, had been offered and accepted the position of first assistant secretary of state, vice Josiah Quincy, recently resigned. He said that the president had Mr. Uhl's name under consideration, together with those of eight or ten other gentlemen, but he declined to say whether or not a selection had been made.

Mr. Uhl was born near Ann Arbor about fifty years ago. He is a graduate of the University of Michigan and of the law school. For many years he has been active in state affairs. He has been mayor of Grand Rapids and regent of the state university. Mr. Uhl is a leading lawyer of Grand Rapids, and is said to be specially fitted for the position for which he is mentioned.

REGENTS ARE EXEMPT.

Michigan Supreme Court Decides That They Cannot Be Sued.

LANSING, Oct. 27.—The supreme court has decided the case of John Weidner, of Ann Arbor, vs. the regents of the state university. The ground taken by Justices Grant, Hooker and Long, who signed the main opinion, is that the regents cannot be sued. The constitution gives them exclusive control of the university, and they are to have the same immunity from suit that is accorded to the state itself. Weidner had furnished some material to Contractor Lucas, who built one of the university hospitals. He claimed Lucas would not pay him for this, and he then sued the regents, holding that they were liable.

Victim of a Confidence Man.

KALAMAZOO, Oct. 27.—Herbert Jeffries, a well-to-do farmer of Texas township, is a victim of a Chicago confidence man to the tune of a $400 span of driving horses. The stranger drove to his place from Louton and told him that he had a customer for the team in Chicago. The horses were delivered to him at Mattawan, and he took them to Chicago, where Mr. Jeffries is now looking for the man and his team.

Grand Rapids Wants a Tower.

GRAND RAPIDS, Oct. 30.—Local business men, aided by railroads centering here, propose to erect a tower 600 feet high, and, in addition, to place it upon high ground, making it possible to see from its summit, among other things, the eastern shore of Lake Michigan. The project has been indorsed by the real estate exchange.

Arrested for an Illinois Murder.

To Raise Insurance Rates.

GRAND RAPIDS, Oct. 26.—Local insurance men announce that the state fire insurance agents have decided to raise rates November 1 and to enforce the 80 per cent. coinsurance clause. The change will materially affect the small towns in the state.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

GREELEY AND RAYMOND.

A Philosophical Dissertation on the Merits of the Two Great Editors.

There is not a paper in all this country that possesses the individuality that characterized the New York Tribune when Horace Greeley was its editor or The Times when edited by Henry J. Raymond.—Kansas Commoner.

The day of great newspapers, edited by great editors, such as Horace Greeley and Henry J. Raymond, has passed away.—Chicago Tribune.

We had the pleasure of knowing both Greeley and Raymond. We were more intimate with the first named of these contemporary editors than with the other. They were able, sincere, energetic, public spirited Americans. Neither of them was a cherub. Mr. Greeley, good man! said "damn" more than once as we regret to remember, and when he called Raymond "the little villain" that cool headed man retorted in language which many people have forgotten. The two did not get along very well together when one was editor of The Tribune and the other among his assistants, nor afterward when they were editors of rival papers, though both were of the same party. Neither of them was an "ideal editor," or a very deep thinker, or a first class statesman or a notable scholar.

Greeley was a stronger and more stirring writer than Raymond, but Raymond was a far more skillful editor than Greeley. Greeley was more fervent in mind than Raymond; Raymond was more judicious and nimble than Greeley. Raymond, when he was a member of the legislature, and the speaker of the assembly, and the lieutenant governor of the state, and a member of congress, and a delegate to state or national conventions, gave evidence that he was greatly more ingenious in politics than Greeley, who, indeed, during the brief period of his service in congress, did not win distinction. Raymond always kept up a close intimacy with those astute political managers, Thurlow Weed and William H. Seward, while Greeley was unable to stay long in the "political firm of Seward, Weed & Greeley," in which, as he said when he left the concern, he had been a "junior partner."

Greeley was more of a philosopher than Raymond, who, in turn, was more of a man of affairs than Greeley. Greeley was often compared with Benjamin Franklin, though he did not possess Franklin's scientific quality; Raymond might be compared, in many respects, with Franklin Pierce, though he was not of Pierce's politics. Greeley had certain eccentricities of manner and action; Raymond was always regarded as a very level headed man. Both of them belonged to the antislavery school in politics; but Greeley's fervor in the cause far surpassed Raymond's. Greeley had in his earlier years been a champion of "social reforms" which were bitterly denounced by Raymond, who, however, in the latter years of his life, began to look with favor upon certain theories of socialism. Greeley was negligent in his dress; Raymond was natty. Both Greeley and Raymond were founders of New York daily papers which still exist, but neither of which is now characterized by the traits of its founder.

We agree with The Kansas Commoner that none of the New York papers now possesses the individuality of Greeley's Tribune or Raymond's Times, and no one of them can possess it, for both of these memorable individuals long ago departed for "the undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns" after it had been their lot "to grunt and sweat under a weary life," but that is not a reason why we should despair of the American press. We may yet have editors not unworthy to be compared with the greatest and best we have ever had.

A true man was Horace Greeley, strong, earnest and good—honored be his memory! An able man was Henry Jarvis Raymond—clear headed, quick witted, reasonable, temperate, genial and highly accomplished—let his name shine in the editorial galaxy!—New York Sun.

A Dance Without a Smile.

They have a singular kind of dance conducted on the greens of country villages in Russia. The dancers stand apart, a knot of young men here, a knot of maidens there, each sex by itself, and silent as a crowd of mutes. A piper breaks into a tune, a youth pulls off his cap and challenges his girl with a wave and a bow. If the girl is willing, she waves her handkerchief in token of assent. The youth advances, takes a corner of the handkerchief in his hand and leads his lassie round and round.

No word is spoken, and no laugh is heard. Stiff with cords and rich with braids the girl moves heavily by herself, going round and round, and never allowing her partner to touch her hand. The pipe goes droning on for hours in the same sad key and measure, and the prize of merit in this "circling," as the dance is called, is given by spectators to the lassie who in all that summer revelry has never spoken and never smiled.—New York Ledger.

The Ruling Passion.

Mr. Theosoph—Speaking of the mysterious, I knew an adept who predicted that he would be taken sick on a certain day, at a certain hour, and would die exactly 2 hours and 10 minutes later. Everything occurred just as he foretold. What do you think of that?

Mr. Hardhead—He must have been a New York man who had lived in Jersey and had become accustomed to doing everything on schedule time.—New York Weekly.

She'll Know Him Again.

When the king of the Belgians stopped in tavern at Spike during a recent rainstorm he overheard the hostess remark: "I've seen the mug of this tall fellow before." Ere leaving the place the king presented the hostess with a bust of himself and later forwarded a large photograph, with his autograph.—Exchange.

HIS WIFE SHAVED HIM.

He Wasn't Going to Be Late to Church if She Knew It.

The story was told by a talkative man who was evidently from the country. The barber drew it out by the usual question asked of new patrons, "Do you shave yourself?"

"Not much," was the reply. "Does my face look as if I did?"

The barber confessed that his face was in good condition, whereupon the talkative man added, with a chuckle:

"And I don't usually get shaved by any barber, either."

"How's that?" asked the barber.

"My wife shaves me," answered the talkative man, with another chuckle. "She's done it every day for five years," he added, "and I ain't never had any reason to complain of her work."

"Who taught her the trade?" asked the barber, becoming interested.

"Learned it herself. It came about this way: One Sunday morning soon after we were married I started off to a barber shop to get shaved before going to church. The shop was crowded, as I knew it would be. But as I'd never been any great churchgoer I didn't hurry. I waited for my favorite barber, who of course was everybody's favorite too. And when I finally got home it was pretty late. I thought my wife would get tired of waiting, you see, and go on to church alone, expecting me to follow. But she hadn't. She sat with her things on, and when I saw her I was prepared to catch it," and the talkative man giggled reflectively.

"And did you catch it?" prompted the barber.

"Well, she wanted an explanation, and of course I told her the usual story about having to wait.

" 'Well,' says she, 'you won't do no more waiting around barber shops while you and I live together. You can shave yourself in future.'

" 'No, I can't,' says I. 'I cut my face.'

" 'Then I'll shave you,' says she.

" 'You can't,' says I.

" 'Yes, I can,' says she, 'and I will.'

"I thought the best way to convince her and keep peace in the family was to let her try it once, so the next Sunday I submitted, telling her beforehand that if she didn't give me a clean shave and no cuts, I wouldn't go to church. Well, sir, she gave me as good a shave as I ever got from a barber, and after that I let her keep it up, and I've never been sorry for it. I tell you, it's a luxury there can't many poor men afford."

"Next!" said the barber.—Buffalo Express.

Cotton Factory Experiments.

A system of moistening the air of a cotton factory—as is required in some departments of a mill before blowing it into the rooms—has been the subject of much experiment. It has been found that, if a jet of steam or vapor is discharged into the main duct any degree of humidity desired can be obtained, but all the air is moistened alike, being distributed to the different rooms by the risers leading thereto. That, however, which is best adapted for one department in a cotton mill may not prove equally favorable for another.

Then, too, the introduction of moisture at this point may work disastrously to the walls of the ducts and risers. It is now found that this objection may be overcome at a small expense, by carrying a steam pipe down through each room and putting opposite each opening in the flue, through which the air enters the room, an outlet with valves for regulating the flow of the steam. In this way the exhaust steam from the engine which drives the blower flows into the room, and being caught up by the current of air passing from the flue is thus distributed throughout the room. Experience with this plan through cold weather has proved its peculiar value.—New York Sun.

Dentists' Secrets.

A long chapter of dentists' secrets—the secrets revealed to them by customers made unconscious but talkative by gas—has been revealed by a conscienceless tooth puller up in Pittsburg. One society young lady swore several lines of blank spaces while a tooth was being drawn. A burglar taken from jail to have a tooth pulled confessed all the details of his crime when under the "influence" and parted with 10 years of liberty. Occasionally men want to fight and are very strong; others are jolly and confidential.

The most interesting story of the series is this, told by one dentist of another: "I know of a young dentist who was head over heels in love with a pretty girl, but he could never make any headway with her. He was bashful. That was the main trouble. One day she came to him to have a tooth pulled. He administered gas, and before she revived she let enough drop to assure my friend that if he proposed he wouldn't be rejected. She is his wife today, and if it had not been for the gas I don't suppose the wedding would ever have come off."—Washington News.

Princess Hohenlohe's Inheritance.

Princess Hohenlohe, the wife of the governor general of Alsace-Lorraine, inherited from her uncle, a Russian general, estates in Russia worth 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 rubles. Under the Russian law foreign nonresidents cannot hold property, and the princess is compelled to sell her estates at once. She asked the czar to grant her a little time, as the financial stringency, which prevails in Russia as well as in this country, has made real estate hard to dispose of. The czar, however, for political reasons, refuses to grant the extension, and the woman may be able to realize only 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 rubles from her heritage.

Why Ambition Is Honored.

"Why do we honor ambition and despise avarice, while they are both but the desire of possession?" inquired a friend of Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

"Because," answered he, "the one is natural, the other artificial; the one the sign of mental health, the other of mental decay; the one appetite, the other disease."

because the alleged steel wheels put out by inexperienced manufacturers have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor.

In this year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor loss is proportionately much less than any wooden wheel, while the loss of the imitation steel ones has frequently been total.

45 sold in '88

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co., in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigations and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO., 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

GALVANIZED. It is not enough to make perfect a wheel of galvanized metal. That never exposed edges shall be subject to rust and decay, the Aermotor is put together before being galvanized.

A Valuable Book.

Dr. E. Hause has obtained the agency for Lenawee county, for a new book which is bound to have a large sale. It is entitled "The Higher Officials of the United States", and shows the buildings in which all laws are made.

It contains portraits, size 4x5 1-2 inches, of the President, Vice-President, all the Cabinet officers, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Major-Generals of the Army, the Rear-Admirals of the Navy, and Governors of all the States and Territories, with a complete history of each official's life and a fac-simile of their signatures.

The book also contains pictures, 6x9, of all the State and Territorial Capital buildings, and gives a brief history of each building, the new battle ship "Iowa," which will be, when built, the finest and most powerful in the navy.

In the book will also be found the salary of each official, and the vote in each state at the last presidential election, and a history of the Supreme Court of the United States from the time it was organized to the present time.

The pictures of official and buildings are all copper etchings made from photographs recently taken, and are the finest that can be made.

The pages of this book are 9x12, printed on very heavy enameled paper, bound in morocco, with elegant large gilt title on cover.

The price of the book is only $2.00 and at this moderate figure it ought to find a place in every household.

Among hundreds of testimonials, we select the following:

ROSWELL P. FLOWER, Gov. of N. Y.

"I am much pleased with the work. I think a perusal of its pages should animate our young men with a desire to gain higher honors. The history of the Governors and higher officials as briefly sketched in this book carries with it the opinion that nearly all have attained to their present rank through their own energy and exertions."

W. J. MCCONNELL, Gov. of Idaho.

"It is perhaps not becoming for one whose portrait and biography appears in the work to make favorable comments, but it cannot be denied that such a book will find a welcome place in the libraries of many of our people. It is educative as well as a source of pleasure to lovers of the artistic."

L. D. LEWELLING, Gov. of Kansas.

"The Highest Officials of the United States is not only a work of art possessing many unique features, but is also a valuable biographical and historical work which reflect credit on the author and publishers, and deserves a large patronage."

B. R. TILLMAN, Gov. of South Carolina.

Another Pioneer Gone.

Adrian has lost another of its old and wealthy business men—Samuel E. Hart. His health had been declining since he suffered an attact of grip about two years ago. Mr. Hart was 70 years of age, Aug. 13th last, and came to Adrian, from New York state, when a boy of 17. He clerked for three years in the dry goods store of his brother-in-law, L. G. Berry. A peculiar fact is that during this time he was entirely ignorant of what his salary was to be. Finally, when his time expired he was imformed that he was to have no pay for the first year, $5 per month for the second, and $10 per month for the third year. Boys nowadays would hardly render faithful service as did Hart for so low wages or under such circumstances. Afterward he was a clerk for a couple of years in his brother's drug store at Alton, Ill. In 1848, after changing about, he opened the drug establishment with which his name has been identified for the nearly subsequent half century. "Hart's old corner drug store" is one of Adrian's landmarks—a very familiar place to many farmers throughout the county, as well as Adrian residents, during the years of its existence. Exceedingly careful in his methods of business, possesed of good judgment, Mr. Hart accumulated a large property. Since 1871, Byron L. Shaw has been a partner in the store. Mr. Hart was once a member of the city council, treasurer of the county agricultural society for several years, a long time Presbyterian, and a Republican. He leaves a wife, one daughter and a son.

On Friday, Henry C. Smith applied to the Lenawee county circuit court for a mandamus to compel the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad to issue a one thousand mile ticket to himself and wife, in accordance with act 90 of the laws of 1891, which he alleges the company has refused to do. The court, after hearing the petition, ordered that the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern company issue said ticket on or before October 30th, or show cause why it should not be so issued. Mr. Smith has opened the way, says the Telegram, to the question why railroad companies, and especially the Lake Shore company, will make rules contrary to existing civil laws. It is now impossible for any man to procure a mileage book on this road good for himself and wife, or mother, or any other member of the family. Henry has tried many times to purchase such a book, going to the general offices in Cleveland, but has always been refused. He proposses now to know whether the railroad is greater than the laws of the people, and is prepared to make a fight.—Morenci Observer.

A Jubilee Magazine.

A famous man is always interesting when he tells how he did the thing which brough him his reputation, and there is a particular charm about Frank R. Stockton's narrative, which opens the November Ladies' Home Journal, of how he conceived and wrote his famous story, "The Lady or the Tiger?", what came of its writing, and the condition of his own mind at the present time of the correct solution of the story. The inner personality of Mr. Howells has, perhaps, never been brought so close to his public as in the many-sided sketch of the novelist which Professor H. H. Boyesen writes of him in this number of the magazine, under the title of "Mr. Howells at Close Range." Few clergymen in New York know society and its leaders better than does the Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., of Trinity Church, and his portrayal of "The Society Women of To-Day" is as strong as it is authoritative. Amelia E. Barr, also, has a strong article in answering the question "Why Do Not Literary Women Marry?" which Octave Thanet cleverly supplements in a article, "But They Do Marry." Robert J. Burdette is at his best in pointing out what, in his opinion, is "The Taskmistress of Woman," while Will Carleton suggests his best poems in "Captain Young's Thanksgiving," which is accompanied by a characteristic illustration by Alice Barer Stephens. Eugene Field is exquisitely dainty in a new poem, "Shuffle-Shoon and Amber-Locks," while Nathaniel Hawthorne's daughter, Mrs. Lathrop, displays her hereditary gifts in a story, "How Love Can Hide." Palmer Cox has his funny "Brownies" in the polar regions, while the various editors seem at their brightest in this number in discussing every phase of a woman's practical life. With this number the Journal is ten years old, and the issue is made, in a sense, a jubilee. An interesting illustrated sketch of the history of the magazine is happily given, the number being clothed in a decorative panel cover by A. B. Wenzell, an excellent piece of work which that artist has not exceeded for artistic beauty in any of his previous drawings. To be only ten years old and have a circulation of 700,000 copies each month—the largest circulation now in the world—is, in a few words, the wonderful record of the Ladies' Home Journal. But it is deserved. The Journal is published by The Curtis Publishing Company, at Philadelphia, for ten cents per issue or one dollar per year.

A Puritan Dinner.

In arranging the table one must be be taken to seat the increasing family so that especially congenial relatives may be near together, writes Frances E. Lanigan in an article describing and giving the menu of "A Puritan Thanksgiving Dinner" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. If the gathering is a very large one it may be well to set a separate table for the children—an arrangement which is sure to meet with great favor from the juvenile element. In the decoration of the table use yellow chrysanthemums and, if it can be obtained, goldenrod. A better arrangement still is the use of wheat and dried grasses as more typical of the festival. Two large, flat bowls of highly-polished red apples should stand at either end of the centre piece, while small dishes of popped corn, home-made molases candy, roasted chestnuts and cracked hickory nuts should be in convenient places about the table. Pickled walnuts, cucumber pickles and small cruets of tomato ketchup should form the hors d'oeuvre. At each plate there may be a guest card of as much simplicity or ornateness as may be desired. A clever design is a turkey in pasteboard with outstreached tail, on which the name of the guest, with Thanksgiving Day, 1893, may be done in old-fashioned script lettering. Sheaves of wheat are also appropriate designs. If it is desired the menu may be placed upon the back of the card. Appropriate quotations add much to the personality of a guest card, and a few from New England authors may be given.

The menu of the dinner is as follows:

Clam Chowder

Fish
Roast Codfish — Boiled Potatoes

Entree
Pork and Beans

Roast
Turkey — Onion Sauce
Cranberry Jelly
Baked Ham

Mashed Potatoes — Baked Squash
Buttered Parsnips

Game
Roast Haunch of Venison
or
Roast Sucking Pig
Red Cranberry Jelly

Salad
Cold Slaw

Brown Bread — Cream Cheese

Dessert
Mince Pie — Pumpkin Pie
Apple Pie — Baked Indian Pudding

Doughnuts in Rhyme.

One cup of sugar, one cup of milk;
Two eggs beaten fine as silk,
Salt and nutmeg (lemon'll do);

EFFECTS OF REPEAL.

WOLCOTT PREDICTS HARD TIMES IN THE WEST.

From Fine Gold Watches to Common Waterburys—The Ox That Was Gored—How the President Managed the Senate—Stewart as a Populist.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3.—[Special.]—"With the suspension of silver purchases we are going to have some very hard times in the western country," said Senator Wolcott of Colorado today. "While it is a mistake to assume that the silver business is the only industry we have in our country, it is an important part of our industrial activity, and to suddenly cut it off means hardship to thousands upon thousands of our people. I am afraid the good old times we used to have in Colorado have gone forever. We shall never again see the flush days. I don't know that I can illustrate the changed condition of affairs in our country in any better way than by telling a story. Five or six years ago two mine owners, friends of mine, went down to New York on business. They had plenty of money to spend, enjoyed a good time and brought back rich presents for their wives and children. Each of them bought himself a fine gold watch, paying $400 or $500 for it.

"One day on the streets of Denver they fell to disputing about the respective merits of their timekeepers. All sorts of virtues were ascribed to one watch and then to the other. In no point could one demonstrate superiority over its rival. Thus the discussion seemed fruitless, for the watches were evidently on a par. Finally one of the men said to the other: 'There is no way in which we can settle this question. You claim your watch keeps as correct time as mine, and that it is just as good in every particular. Now, I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll bet you $100 that I can throw my watch farther than you can throw yours.' 'Done,' said the other: 'I take that bet.' So the two men squared off, took their watches in their right hands and threw them as far as they could. I don't know which won the bet, but the referee carried off both the wrecks of watches to sell to the jeweler for old metal.

Then and Now Among the Miners.

"That was five or six years ago," continued Senator Wolcott. "Last summer the same two men met near my office in Denver. Neither was as prosperous as he had been, and their faces were pretty long. One had the price of two drinks in his pocket, and after imbibing they began to talk of the good old days when the mines were booming and silver was selling at a high price. They brought up the story of the rival watches and their novel method of settling the dispute. 'By the way,' said one, 'what kind of a watch are you carrying now?' 'A pretty good watch,' responded the other, 'though it didn't cost very much money. Here it is.' And he drew from his pocket a timekeeper which was attached to the end of a strong, tough, cheap chain—a common Waterbury. 'And how are you fixed for a timepiece?' asked the man who had just displayed his chronometer. 'About the same,' replied the other laughingly, reaching into his vest pocket and pulling out another Waterbury. This shows you how times have changed among the mine owners of my state," concluded Senator Wolcott, "and I very much fear when I go home again I will find my constituents too poor to carry even a Waterbury."

How the President Managed Them.

With the repeal bill out of the way, statesmen are expecting an avalanche of appointments from the White House. For two months or more the president has practically abandoned the work of filling the offices with Democrats. A few appointments he has made, particularly in the diplomatic field, but important postmasterships and collectorships and other offices have remained untouched. Senators and representatives and the candidates themselves have, by all the arts known to the politician, endeavored to interest the president in their cases and to secure some action, but Mr. Cleveland has throughout the contest over repeal held but one position—that financial legislation was much more important than changes in federal offices. "Pass this bill and settle the financial question," he has exclaimed about 40 times a week, "and then we will see about the appointments." In this manner the president held up the prizes in which so many politicians are interested and virtually said to the naughty boys of congress, "Be good, do your work and then come to me, and I will see that you are rewarded."

Makes a Difference Whose Ox It Is.

There is no end of gossip in Washington concerning the manner in which the president influenced the senate during the long struggle for repeal. Oddly enough, most of the criticisms of the president's conduct come from Democrats and not from Republicans. The Republicans appear to take the position that it is not their quarrel, and that it is best for them to maintain silence and pursue the policy of masterly inactivity. But the Democrats who were opposed to repeal, and who are not very much in love with Mr. Cleveland anyway, have done an enormous amount of growling about what they call the interference of the executive with the legislative branch of the government. They become very much excited while denouncing the president and say things have come to a pretty pass in this country when it is necessary for senators to go to the other end of the avenue to get their orders before acting in their capacity as representatives of the people.

These Democrats confidently predict that never again will a president of the United States endeavor to manage both the executive and the legislative branches of our government. They imagine that if any one but Grover Cleveland were to attempt to execute such a policy the people would rise up and impeach him at the bar of public opinion. On the other hand, those Democrats who were in favor of repeal clapped their hands with glee when the president put on the screws and forced certain senators, somewhat against their will, into support of the Voorhees bill. They admit that the president did to a greater or less extent coerce and influence legislative representatives but their argument is that the end justified the means, and that instead of being criticised Mr. Cleveland should be praised for his forceful and effective handling of the question. So you see it makes a great deal of difference whose ox is gored. Meanwhile Mr. Cleveland appears to be doing very well, notwithstanding denunciation of members of his own party and of the Populist party, among whom Mr. Stewart of Nevada is now classed.

Sealskin Jackets and Capes.

Sealskins are made up as three-quarter jackets, with a cape cut in a rounded form, and in such a manner that the edges curve upward on the shoulder. The basques are full, and the sleeves large. This favorite fur is also made into long capes, reaching well below the waist, and having collars edged with sable or fluted with sable tails.

DULL SOCIAL SEASON.

HOW OFFICIAL SOCIETY AT THE CAPITAL IS TO ENTERTAIN.

Secretary Lamont the Only Wealthy Member of the Cabinet—No Champagne Punch or Terrapin—Mrs. Carlisle to Be a Leader In Cabinet Circles.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 4.—[Special.]—Women who have had much experience in Washington society are looking forward to a rather dull social season. At this time very little is doing in the world of society, but New Year's day will usher in a short but sharp campaign of receptions and calls. The cabinet is always the social center in Washington. If the members of the cabinet are rich or well to do, have large houses and big bank accounts with which to entertain, society is said to be a success. But it happens at this time that we have a poor man's cabinet. We have no William C. Whitney, with his millions, his generosity and his good taste, to make a rallying point for the society of the capital. We have no John Wanamaker, no Levi P. Morton.

It is rather odd that the richest member of the present cabinet is a young man who, some five or six years ago, was a mere clerk in Mr. Cleveland's presidential office. Daniel Lamont now has more money than any other four members of the cabinet put together. Gresham is poor—worth not more than $40,000; Carlisle has very little outside of his salary; Herbert could scrape up probably $20,000 or $30,000; Olney is fairly well to do, but far from rich; Smith is worth a modest $200,000; Morton owns a few farms and railroad stocks, but has no large income, and Bissell is said by his friends to be rated at something like $20,000. Dan Lamont, on the other hand, is classed among the millionaires, though it is doubted if he has actually reached that dignity. He is making money rapidly, however, through his investments with the Whitney-Crimmins street car syndicate in New York, and will soon be much more than a millionaire.

The Vice President's Simplicity.

Vice President Stevenson is also a poor man. His income aside from his salary does not exceed $3,000 or $4,000 a year. He has a large family, and it is about as much as he can do to make both ends meet without spending large sums in social entertainment. He and Mrs. Stevenson still live at a hotel and are likely to remain there because it is cheaper than keeping house. Mrs. Stevenson takes the sensible view that inasmuch as they are poor it would be foolish for them to try to make a splurge.

She believes in modest, simple entertainments, known here as "small and carlies." The ladies of the cabinet agree with her, and the entertainments of the coming season will be the most modest and inexpensive known in Washington for many years. There is a tacit agreement that decorations shall be simple and unassuming—a few flowers and plants here and there in the parlors, with no attempt at gorgeousness in floful display. It is also agreed that the luncheons shall be as simple as they can be made, and that caterers shall not be employed in giving them. Instead of champagne punch, terrapin and other high priced luxuries, there will be seen simple chicken and potted meat sandwiches and occasionally a bowl of exceedingly mild and harmless claret punch.

The ladies of the cabinet agree that if they throw their houses open and make their callers feel at home, on good terms with their hostess and one another, with bright conversation and exchange of compliments, that is as far as they can go. There will be no elaborate receptions with bands of music, hundreds of dollars' worth of flowers, liveried servants, champagne galore and hired professional entertainers.

The Wine Will Not Flow This Winter.

Washington society has already begun to look about to discover if possible the house at which lavishness is to be the rule. There is an element in Washington society that is attracted unerringly and persistently to the parlors in which champagne punch and terrapin are served. These people had hoped that the magnificent home of Senator and Mrs. Brice, which is the famous Webster-Corcoran mansion, remodeled at an expense of $30,000, would again be the scene of this sort of revelry, but it is quietly hinted that Mrs. Brice and her daughters will spend the winter in Europe, and that the famous old house will not be opened to society.

Last winter Senator Brice spent a small fortune in receptions and dinners. He bought roses by the hundred at 75 cents per rose, champagne by the carload and terrapin by the barrel. He employed 12 or 15 servants and gave lavish orders to caterers. During the last summer, however, Senator Brice, in common with many other capitalists and financiers, met with severe losses on account of the panic, and while he is still "on his feet" financially and well able to take care of himself he has concluded that his circumstances do not justify him in repeating his former social exploits.

The Cabinet Houses.

Mrs. Carlisle is likely to be the leader of the cabinet circle, both on account of her experience and her native force of character. She has exercised much influence in setting the pace for the cabinet ladies, and it was largely her courage that induced the other ladies of that circle to reach the sensible decision to pursue a modest and inexpensive policy. Mrs. Carlisle is known as one of the best cooks in Washington, and a specialty at her entertainments will be the serving of inexpensive and delightful dishes of her own preparation, many of them possessing strong southern characteristics.

Mrs. Lamont has had much experience in Washington society and is one of the most popular women ever seen here. She was the intimate friend of the late Mrs. Whitney, who left behind her a record of social triumphs unexampled in this capital. She is also an intimate friend of Mrs. Cleveland and will be prominent in the White House social events.

Mrs. Bissell is likely to be one of the most popular of all the cabinet ladies. Large of person, hearty of manner, with a keen sense of humor and unfailing good nature, she is well equipped for a social campaign. In addition to these qualities she is a fine musician and a passionate lover of music. She has a delightful voice, which is well trained, and her home is likely to be one of the musical centers during the coming four years. The handsome home of Secretary and Mrs. Smith will be the rallying point for the southern contingent, Mrs. Smith being a southern woman of great accomplishments and good family. She will gather about her a number of beautiful girls from her own section.

Secretary Herbert, who is a widower, surprised his friends a few weeks ago by renting one of the fine old mansions with which Washington abounds, and he is having it fitted up in comfortable but elegant style. There are rumors that the secretary will have as mistress for his new home a charming young bride, and that the interesting ceremony will be performed before New Year's day.

Thos. R. Kyle has received the appointment of postmaster at Tecumseh. With six candidates in the field, it was very natural that people should be divided in their preferences, but we apprehend that now the decision has been made, the other candidates will accept the appointment as a finality and give Mr. Kyle their loyal support. The appointee has long been regarded as one of our most prominent young business men, having made an excellent record as village marshal, and he will doubtless "keep his record true" in the new and more responsible place he will soon assume. The HERALD begs leave to extend its congratulations, accompanied by our heartiest wishes for his success in administering the affairs of that important office.

Aera VanTuyle and Ernest Welch were running horses near Elias DePuy's place, in Franklin, last week Wednesday evening. They were turning a corner at full speed when they suddenly came upon Jos. Spalding. Aera was thrown clear over Spalding's buggy and was picked up unconscious. His horse was thought at first to be ruined, but it is some better at present writing. Welch and his horse escaped unhurt.—Clinton Local.

It is a curious fact that although Eugene Field has written over five hundred poems, he has never written a single love-song, "I don't know exactly why it is," said the Western poet recently in explanation, "except that I was married when quite young, and I did not begin to write poetry until after my marriage." Mr. Field has now written his first love poem, which he calls "Will You Be My Sweetheart?" and has given it to The Ladies' Home Journal for publication.

The finest farm house building in Hillsdale Co., burned last week. It was the home of Wm. Case, located in Scipio township. $9,500 was the valuation of the building and effects, which was insured for $5,000.—Addison Courier.

Oscar P. Bills is quite elated over the result of his trial in the Circuit Court last week and well he may be. Had this trial gone against him, it would have established a precedent that might have involved him in much litigation hereafter.

Hillsdale county swine breeders captured a big string of the prizes at the World's Fair last week. C. H. Williams of Church's Corners, M. H. Walworth and D. F. Woodling, Hillsdale, are the winners. They exhibited Yorkshire and Essex breeds.—Addison Courier.

The Michigan Farmer has recently changed its form, discarding the old blanket sheet, and making it a four column, sixteen page paper. It is a great improvement. The paper has taken an upward tendency in its editorial management also, since the new proprietors assumed control.

The trial of John Hanley took place last week at Adrian and resulted in his acquittal. The evidence showed that the legal title of the property was in himself, hence his own buildings were burned. Thus the charge of arson fell to the ground. This will probably end the case.

We are very glad to know that Ed. Kirchgessner is steadily on the gain and is now able to sit up most of the day. He has had a hard tussle of it, but is now on the road to a complete recovery, to the intense satisfaction of our entire community.

Hon. Edwin F. Uhl, of Grand Rapids, has received the appointment of Assistant Secretary of State. This is a first-class appointment in every respect, and it also confers a high honor upon the State. He will be the first Michigan Democrat to hold a place in that department since the days of Lewis Cass.

The members of Mrs. Judge Stacy's family, one and all, desire to express their thanks to Abner Wilson and Hiram Wescott for the faithful manner in which they discharged the trust committed to their hands, when the family left for Chicago; and particularly for their amateur detective work on that memorable Saturday evening.

Mrs. C. A. Stacy and family feel under special obligations to Deputy-Seriff Stevens for the prompt and efficient manner in which he brought the perpetrators of the burglary at their house to justice. Although he was simply performing his sworn duty, yet it makes one feel easier to know that we have an officer in this community who is not afraid to perform his duty unflinchingly in an emergency of this kind.

It would seem from the following clipping from the Standard, that it is a hard matter for horses to get a drink in Hillsdale. "The story is told that a couple of Hudson young ladies drove to this city the other day and undertook to water their horse. They didn't know how to get the animal's head down to the trough; work as they would, they couldn't find the secret of the harness. The trough was too heavy for them to lift up to the horse's head, so they lifted the rear end of the buggy; supposing that would tip the horse down so he could reach the trough."

The Tecumseh Herald has an unpleasant habit of filching news items from The Times and stupidly crediting them to other papers, in the rare instances that it does not print them as original matter.—Adrian Times.

Hold on, neighbor. Go slow, if you please. The young man who pushes the local quill on the Times has evidently been to Chicago and returned badly broken up. Perhaps he has been taking his "Constitutionals" too frequently of late, and at unseasonable hours. A newspaper that uses the scissors as liberally as the Times does, both in its local news, editorial and telegraph columns, should be a little chary about maligning its neighbors. We indulge rather sparingly in clippings from that source we admit, for two reasons. First, we generally find later and more accurate news in the Telegram, and secondly, we seldow publish a reprint from the Times without incurring the danger of discovering afterwards that the same item has previously appeared in some other paper.

The chap who wrote the following was evidently a member of some village board, and knows how it is himself; "If the village council does anything that does not exactly suit you—cuss 'em. They get no salary for the time devoted to looking after the affairs of the village from year to year and do what seems best for everybody, but that don't matter. They were elected for the express purpose of pleasing all factions and persons at the same time, and if they don't do it, cuss'em. They expect it and will be disappointed if you don't.

Through misinformation it was reported in last weeks issue, that a Halloween party would be given by the Misses Nellie and Hattie Conklin at their home. The party, however, was given by a committee of young ladies, and the place was a vacant house owned by M. R. Keyser, three and one-half miles north-west of the village. The ladies took possession of the house, cleaned, decorated and trimmed until it was transformed into a veritbale elfin palace. Here a jolly party, accompanied by Gray's orchestra, assembled on Tuesday evening and enjoyed the pleasures of a Halloween festival.

The Oates bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States was discussed.

In the senate on the 24th, after discussion of the silver repeal bill, it was announced that the southern senators opposed to the measure had decided to give up the fight and allow a vote to be taken in a day or two.... In the house the time was occupied in discussing the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy in the United States.

SEVERAL speeches against the silver repeal bill were made in the senate on the 25th.... In the house bills were introduced providing for the retirement of the national bank notes and for the issue in their place of United States notes, and providing that no pension claim heretofore or hereafter allowed shall be annulled, suspended or set aside unless it is shown that the pension was obtained by fraud or perjury. The bankruptcy bill was further considered.

On the 26th discussion of the silver repeal bill occupied the time of the senate.... In the house the death of the chaplain, S. W. Haddaway, of Maryland, was announced, and a committee of seven was appointed to attend the funeral. The senate resolution extending the acknowledgment of the United States to foreign governments for their participation in the world's fair were concurred in. The bankruptcy bill was further considered.

SENATOR PEFFER'S amendment to the repeal bill providing for silver coinage at a ratio of 16 to 1 was defeated by a vote of 39 to 28 in the senate on the 27th, which was taken as meaning that the Voorhees bill would become a law. The measure was further discussed.... In the house a resolution calling for information as to state banks was the cause of animated discussion, and an attempt to pass it disclosed the presence of less than a quorum, whereupon an adjournment was taken until the 30th.

BREATH IN DEAD MEN

STARTLING RESULTS OF A NEW JERSEY DOCTOR'S EXPERIMENTS.

He Has Made a Simple Apparatus With Which the Lungs May Be Put to Work After They Have Once Stopped—It Is Not Patented and Any One Can Make It.

Dr. Edwin De Baun of Passaic, N. J., makes the announcement regarding the thus honored statement that a man has died from lack of breath—that if breath was all he needed he should have lived.

Considering that air is the most plentiful resource of nature, having, as political economists would say, no value because of its abundance, one would think that Dr. De Baun had made no particular discovery. But there is more in his statement than is apparent at first.

From time immemorial physicians have directed their ingenuity toward an effective application of this wealth of air, but without satisfactory results. Cases of suspended animation come under their notice every day. Men are rescued from the water after a hard battle with the waves, their lungs filled with water, the life's action suspended. In the majority of instances restoration of animation cannot be effected. The lungs may be emptied of the water; the life giving air, so abundant, is at hand—and if it could only be forced into the organs and respiration started life could be renewed. Physicians' efforts to solve the problem have been unceasing, but, says Dr. De Baun, misdirected.

When a man is rescued from the water, the first thing done is to empty the lungs of water by rolling him on a barrel or lifting him from the ground head downward. Then he is laid on his back, the arms raised to expand the lungs and a ryhthmic contraction and expansion of the chest walls effected by alternate pressure and relaxation. Sometimes th[illegible]ing process has been kept up for [illegible] ultimate success, but consid[illegible]ossibilities recognized in artif[illegible]ration the results have been fa[illegible]m encouraging.

Dr. De Baun has worked on an entirely new line, and the result of his experiments and observation is a method of internal respiration, which, he claims, cannot possibly fail. His attention was first directed to the subject by a case of suspended animation in a newly born child. It has been the practice in such cases to force air into the lungs of the infant by breathing into its mouth and then contracting the lungs by pressure upon the chest. But this has been found not only intensely disagreeable, but highly inefficient.

Dr. De Baun decided to try a new expedient. He passed a small rubber tube through the nose of the infant and down into the throat. Closing the mouth, he forced air through the tube from a rubber bag, inflating the lungs; then, releasing the pressure from the mouth, found, as expected, that the elasticity of the muscles of the chest caused immediate contraction of the lungs, forming a complete respiration. This was kept up for 45 minutes, when natural respiration had been restored, and a life had been saved. Since then Dr. De Baun has perfected this hastily improvised apparatus and finds that animation may be often restored within 15 minutes.

The apparatus is as simple as it is ingenious. It consists of a long rubber tube, near one end of which is a piece of soft rubber with which to cover the mouth and nose. At the other end are two rubber bulbs. After the tube has been inserted between the teeth, and the mouth and nose covered slightly, the lower bulb is compressed, forcing air into the second bulb, which acts as a reservoir. This second bulb is much more elastic than the other and maintains a steady pressure of air through the tube. It is covered with loose netting, which acts as a sort of safety valve against overpressure. The tube is fitted with a stopcock that may be used to lend force to the first few respirations.

A few compressions of the lower bulb are sufficient to fill the lungs. Then the pressure on nose and mouth is relaxed, and the lungs are emptied by the natural elasticity of the muscles of the chest. This elasticity remains even after death, and with this instrument it is quite possible to make a dead man breathe regularly as long as the application continues. In some of the doctor's experiments on dead bodies this simulation of life has been absolutely startling.

It is not for dead men, however, that the "insufflator," as it is called, has been devised, but for men who have been brought apparently to death's door by asphyxiation from gas and water. In the latter case the lungs must first be emptied. The apparatus weighs, but a few ounces. It is not patented, as Dr. De Baun is a strict observer of medical ethics, which declare that the discoveries of a physician belong to the world. He is treasurer of the state board of medical examiners of New Jersey and has invented several valuable surgical instruments and devices.—New York World.

The Agricultural Profession.

The educated agriculturist is slowly but surely driving the uneducated and unthinking man from the field. With the retirement of every quack and the correspondin[illegible] advent of the thinking man on the farm arena is elevated the whole agricultural profession, which is thus brought one step nearer its true position that it justly held in Roman times—the foremost rank of all the world.—Science.

ANOTHER HORROR.

Fatal Accident to a Toledo & Ann Arbor Train.

Wrecked by the Sinking of the Track, the Broken Cars Take Fire—Three of the Trainmen Are Burned to Death.

IN A FIERY FURNACE.

HAMBURG, Oct. 27.—A Toledo & Ann Arbor northbound freight train jumped the track about 3 miles north of here and Fireman George Alberts, of Owosso; Engineer Beaulieu and Brakeman Thomas Mulligan were probably instantly killed. If not, the two former met death by fire, as an oil car and a coal car next to the engine almost immediately caught fire and were consumed. Brakeman Thomas Mulligan met instant death. There was a sinkhole under the track. When the engine struck the place the rails gave way, the engine plunged from the track, the other cars piling in a mass upon it. A few burned bones are all that remain to tell where Beaulieu and Alberts went down to their death. The remains of Mulligan, whose home is said to be in Brantford, Ont., were taken from the wreck so disfigured that they could only be recognized by keys found with the charred body. Conductor Fludder and Trainmaster M. D. Fohay, who were in the caboose, escaped uninjured. There were twenty-three loaded and three empty cars in the train. Two cars of oil and three cars of coal caught fire. Passenger train No. 4, southbound, had a narrow escape. It was next on the schedule to pass over the sinkhole.

GRAND RAPIDS, Oct. 30.—The award on folding beds given to the Forest Furniture company, of Rockford, for its display at the world's fair, profoundly stirred up the Gunn, the Welch and the M. L. Sweet Folding Bed companies, of this city. W. S. Gunn, of the Gunn company, has returned from the fair and states that on the strength of the objections made by the Grand Rapids men the award has been set aside. It is alleged that a member of the committee on awards is in the employ of a Chicago furniture house, which some time ago had trouble with the Gunn company and now handles the Forest City beds exclusively, and that business influences decided the award.

SEEKS HEAVY DAMAGES.

A Michigan Lady Sues a Chicago Street Railway Company for $15,000.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 30.—Charlotte F. Murray, of White Pigeon, Mich., has brought suit in the United States court against the Chicago City Railway company for $15,000 damages. Mrs. Murray came to Chicago last April with her daughter for the purpose of visiting friends and the world's fair. As she was stepping from a cable train at Forty-fifth street the car started suddenly and she was thrown violently to the ground, sustaining a fracture of the hip.

A Pitiful Mistake.

BATTLE CREEK, Oct. 27.—All the victims of the Grand Trunk wreck are now known excepting two. The body of Mrs. J. A. Wood, of Odessa, N. Y., was brought here Wednesday from Edwardsburg, Mich., where it had been shipped as the body of Mrs. Evlina A. Aldrich. The mistake is a most pitiful one, and the sheriff found the friends already gathered at the funeral when he arrived to claim the corpse. It was a most disagreeable duty for the officer to bring back the body.

Died at a Ripe Old Age.

CHARLOTTE, Oct. 27.—Rev. Jacob Garber died at the home of his son, Samuel Garber, in this city, Thursday morning, lacking but a few months of being 99 years old. He was a regularly ordained minister of the United Brethren church, and, though he had been on the retired list for a number of years, each year he preached a sermon on the first Sunday succeeding his birthday.

Robbed of His Savings.

ADRIAN, Oct. 28.—While John Koegel, reputed to be worth $25,000, was eating his supper thieves entered his bedroom, broke open the trunk in which he had $1,300 and carried off the money, together with some smaller amounts. During the recent bank scare he drew his cash out of bank.

Senator Hill, who acquired quite a reputation as a "snapper" a year or two ago, shows that he has considerable snap in him yet.

The wisest course in politics is to vote for the best man, and you cannot be mistaken. So in the use of blood-purifiers, you can't be mistaken if you take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, because all parties agree that it is the best—the Superior Medicine. Try it this month.

This Senate will go down to posterity with one of the most conspicuous records for spoiled silence known in history.

After Breakfast

To purify, vitalize and enrich the blood, and give nerve, bodily and digestive strength, take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Continue the medicine after every meal for a month or two and you will feel "like a new man." The merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla is proven by its thousands of wonderful cures. Why don't you try it?

Purely vegetable—Hood's Pills—25c.

It seems that about half the people in this world play tool and that the other half work the fool.

It has the genuine ring. Edman & Stout, leading Druggists of Lima, O., write, April 12, 1893: "We can truthfully and honestly say that Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is the only remedy we ever sold that we never had a kick from. We only have about a doz. of the 6 doz. you sent us in January and hardly a day passes but what several persons come in and call for it. It is the best preparation for Nervous Troubles we ever handled. Send us 6 doz. quick." Sold in Tecumseh by J. J. Orr. 3

"What are you crying for, Fritz?" "Because my brothers have a holiday and I havent." "But why havent you a holiday, too?" "Because I'm not old enough to go to school yet."

Be on guard against imitations of Pearline. When they are not dangerous, they are worthless. They are usually both. Pearline does what nothing else can. It saves labor in washing, and insures safety to what is washed. It is cheap, thorough, and reliable. Nothing else will "do as well;" it is just as well to have nothing else.

In journeying recently with a traveling man friend, the conversation took such shape that he took a bottle, from his grip, of Brant's Extract of Blackberry, saying: "I never travel without it. I am easily affected by the change of water, Chicago water especially always troubles me, but a dose or two of Brant's Blackberry quickly cures the trouble." He had it right and if the thousands who travel and visit Chicago this summer are "Wise like the drummer" to have Brant's Blackberry with them, they will find it a very useful article. 25 cent bottles of J. J. Orr, Tecumseh. 3

A Democratic contemporary speaks of Senator Hill as a man who is very "level headed on his feet." It might have added that he is also slightly pussy-footed on his head.

Scribner's Magazine for November opens with a picturesque and amusing travel sketch by Colonel H. E. Colvile, C. B. of the Grenadier Guards, in which he describes his experiences while "In Camp with the Katchins"—a tribe of cattle-raiding mountainers, living near the Chinese frontier of Upper Burma This region is held of much strategic importance by England, as the detail of Colonel Colvile, one of the best-known officers for such service, attests. Colvile made an interesting series of photographs during his travels, from which Mr. A. F. Jaccaci has produced a most stricking series of drawings.

The wicked Democrats have closed down another mill. It is the Corbett-Mitchell mill on Coney Island.

A TRAPPIST REFECTORY.

Cold and Gloomy Surroundings and a Scanty Bill of Fare.

We reached the Trappist refectory. A great cold room, with whitewashed walls and five long, narrow tables, with benches on each side, stretching from end to end, was the place where the monks took their very frugal meals. The tables were laid for the first meal. There were no cloths, and it is almost needless to add that there were no napkins, although these are considered so essential in France that even in the most wretched auberge one is usually laid before the guest. Trappists, however, have little need of them.

At each place were a wooden spoon and fork, a plate, a jug of water, and another jug—a smaller one—of beer, and a porringer for soup, which is the chief diet of the Trappists. Very thin soup it is, the ingredients being water, chopped vegetables, bread and a little oil or butter.

Until a few years ago no oily matter, whether vegetable or animal, was allowed in the soup, nor was it permissible, except in case of sickness, to have more than one meal a day, but the necessity of relaxing the rule a little was realized. Now, during the six summer months of the year, there are two meals a day—namely, at 11 and 6, but in winter there is still only one that is called a meal, and this is at 4. There is, however, a gouter—just something to keep the stomach from collapsing—at 10 in the morning. No fish, nor flesh, nor animal product, except cheese and butter, is eaten by these Trappists unless they fall ill, and then they have meat or anything else that they may need to make them well. There is, however, very little sickness among them.

The living of each Trappist probably costs no more than sixpence a day to the community. Assuming that the money brought into the common fund by those who have a private fortune—the fathers, as a rule, are men of some independent means—covers the establishment expenses, and the taxation imposed by the state, there must remain a considerable profit on the work of each individual, whether he labors in the fields or in the dairy and cheeserooms, or concerns himself with the sales and the accounts, or, like the porter at the gate, tests with an instrument the richness of the milk that is brought in by the peasants, lest they who have been befriended by the monks in sickness and penury should steal from them in return.

To devote this surplus obtained by a life of sacrifice, compared to which the material misery of the beggars whom they relieve is luxury, to the lessening of human suffering, to the encouragement of the family, offering the hand of charity to the worthy and the unworthy, expecting no honor from all this, and not even gratitude, is a life that makes that of the theoretical philanthropists and humanitarian philosophers look rather barren.—Temple Bar.

Origin of the Peach.

Nothing is now more universally accepted than the fact that the peach is an improved variety of the almond. The almond has a thin shell around the stone, which splits open and shows the stone when mature. This outer skin has simply become fleshy in the peach, so that it is all that gives it its specific character. It seems now clear from investigation in the history of ancient Babylon that in their gardens, nearly 4,000 years ago the peach was cultivated then as it now is.

It must have been many years before this that the peach was improved from the almond, and this fact goes to show the great antiquity of the fruit. Possibly gardening in some respects, at least so far as it relates to many of our cultivated fruits, was as far advanced 6,000 or 8,000 or perhaps 10,000 years back as it is today.

Phœnicians, many thousands of years ago, as is proved by the records, had in their gardens almonds, apricots, bananas, citrons, figs, grapes, olives, peaches, pomegranates; and even sugar cane was in extensive cultivation. Certainly this shows how far advanced these nations were in garden culture many years ago. —Detroit Free Press.

Musical Tones.

A stringed instrument suspended in a favorable position near a pianoforte will sound when tones corresponding to the open strings are produced on the pianoforte. The volume of the answering tone will depend upon atmospheric conditions, the quality and color of the persuading tone and the sensitiveness of the responding material. There is a familiar anecdote told of a famous tenor, who by singing the tone that was consonant with that of a wineglass, could make the glass shiver so violently that it would fall to pieces. It is because of this tonal sympathy that the cause of a harsh, rattling tone that may suddenly appear in a pianoforte is detected with difficulty. Though it may appear to be in the instrument, it is often far away and may come from a loose globe or pendant on a chandelier. Even a key in a door has been known to be the guilty cause.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

If there is a bigger fool than the man who can't tell what he saw at the Fair, it's the man who can't keep from telling it.

OBITUARY.

A late copy of the Birmingham, Conn., Transcript contains a lengthy obituary mention of Geo. H. Peck. The deceased resided in Tecumseh many years ago and married his wife here. She was a daughter of David Stillson and a sister of Dr. Catlin's first wife. Many of our older citizens will remember both Mr. Peck and his wife, as they were quite prominent people during their residence here.

George Hobart Peck was born in Woodbury on April 20, 1834. His family traces its lineage back to Joseph Peck of Milford. Ephraim Birdseye Peck, of the sixth generation, father of George Hobart Peck, moved to the town of Woodbury in 1792. His wife was Mrs. Betsy (Porter) Peck. The father and mother were both Christian people, remembered for their deep Christian piety and earnestness. In the early years of life George Hobart Peck attended the district school in Woodbury and worked on the farm in the summer. Later he secured the advantages of study at the famous Thompson academy. At nineteen years of age he began teaching school in Woodbury, spending his summers upon his father's farm at work. He taught school for four years and then gave his entire attention to the farm work.

On December 25, 1856 he was married to Miss Maria P. Stillson of Tecumseh, Mich., daughter of David Stillson. In 1858 he moved to Tecumseh where he engaged in the drug business. In 1860 he came east again and purchased a drug business in Woodbury which he conducted for some years. In 1863 he came to Birmingham and purchased the drug business owned and conducted by G. H. Corlies in the building on the corner of Main and Minerva streets, now conducted by Charles H. Coe. He continued in the business alone until 1873 when Mr. Coe became interested, and held the control of the business until 1884 when he disposed of his part, Mr. Coe taking entire control.

In 1866 the Star Pin company was formed and Mr. Peck became one of the principal stockholders and was made the president of the company. He was president of the company until 1875, at which time he secured larger interests and succeeded Joseph Tomlinson as secretary and treasurer and became general manager. He continued the active manager of the Star Pin company up to the time of his death, and through his sound business judgement has built up an extensive and permanent industry. It was in this business that the natural ability of the man was brought out. In all his work there was a thoroughness in all things that was characteristic of him. While perhaps thrown into contact with all kinds of business men, it has never been said that any of his dealings were other than of the most upright and honorable kind. Mr. Peck was a man entirely above suspicion of any character. His treatment of those employed by him was the very best and he was respected and honored by all his employes.

He was a member of St. James church and for twenty-five years has been the senior warden. He has been superintendent of the Sunday school for twenty-seven years. He was active in all church work from the time of his coming here.

As a man he commanded the utmost respect. He was without an enemy. Genial and kind by nature, always careful and thoughtful of others, he made new friends constantly and held the old ones. He was looked up to by all. Those who sought his advice, whether on moral or business questions, found in him a wise adviser. In his home life the truest mark of his character came out. His life there was his life abroad except it was more strongly developed by home influences.

A widow and two children, Irving H. and Howard B., survive him.

Resolutions of Respect.

Death has again entered our club and taken away one of its oldest and most esteemed members. In the death of Mr. Geo. Griswold, we feel that we have met with a great loss, being one of the organizers of the Club, always one of the first to advance its usefulness, prompt to act in any capacity when called upon, and to him in a great measure we are indebted for our success as an organization and we feel that the family have lost a kind and indulgent husband and father; but it is our hope that our and their loss will be his eternal gain. Therefore

RESOLVED, That the sympathy of the Club be extended to the bereaved family, but would commend them to Him that doeth all things well.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the bereaved family; that they be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, and be spread at large on our records.

What the People Pay For Literary Instruction and Entertainment.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—The address delivered by Charles A. Dana to the students of Union college upon the subject of "Journalism" would seem, if the letters Mr. Dana has received and the discussion which his views have occasioned in newspapers be considered, to have excited an interest quite as great in the newspaper world as in that of the young collegians both of Union and other universities who have been looking forward to a career in journalism.

Some criticism has been heard upon Mr. Dana's statement of the pecuniary earnings possible for those who make journalism a life business, and it has been thought that he must have exaggerated. But Mr. Dana was well within the truth when he spoke of the possible earnings, indicating that as journalism now is the chances are quite as great in that pursuit to make comfortable incomes as in any other profession.

A company of publishers, being led into discussion respecting the expenses and emoluments which literature entails and furnishes, including in that word the newspapers, reached some remarkable conclusions, tending to show that next to the amount of money which the American people spend for food, clothing and rent is the sum represented by this business of furnishing news, interesting, entertaining and instructive reading matter, accompanied by illustrations, and this estimate does not include the amount expended for book publication.

One of the publishers being asked to give a rough estimate of the amount expended each month for the current year for the monthly magazines published in New York city alone, after a quick computation, figured it at $250,000, although sometimes the gross sum he thought would reach as high a figure as $300,000. That means that in the comparatively small department of magazine literature issuing from New York city presses there is an expenditure yearly of $3,000,000, not including the interest on the plant or any other expense than that entailed by collecting, printing and delivering the literary articles and the illustrations of them.

From this estimate other publishers took up the computing pencil and at a rough guess reported that the expense entailed by publishing literary matter both in the magazines, in the weekly newspapers and in some of the other forms of publication outside the daily newspaper field was probably not far from $300,000 a month. So that these publishers estimate that the business of publishing literature in New York city alone, not including books and daily newspapers, entails an expense of from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 a year.

This, then, is the modern endowment of literature which New York city alone furnishes, and while there are no very reliable data as to the expenses of publication of similar forms of literature in other parts of the country yet the publishers who make these computations were convinced that it is safe to estimate that periodical literature of all forms in the United States entails an output every year of not far from $15,000,000. This is an extraordinary development, most of which has appeared, according to these publishers, within the last 20 years.

This endowment means that a new industry has been created or a new profession. It has made a certain market rate for literature which before that time was dealt in at haphazard prices. It has made it possible for men willingly to turn their backs upon law, medicine and the schools and devote themselves to literary work, feeling just as sure of their market as does the farmer or the iron producer. It has created a splendid race of writers whom Mr. Dana cheerfully regards as professional men. It has made it possible for those who are in the first class to count on earnings which are greater than the majority of lawyers in the country are able to make, and almost compare with the princely incomes of the leaders of the bar. It has enabled writers who are of the second class, so to speak, to earn with certainty incomes of from $5,000 to $10,000 a year, and it furnishes employment to thousands who make fully as much money by such pursuit as they could hope to do in any other profession. This is the modern endowment of literature.

Members of the Typothetæ society of New York who saw these estimates were able to furnish in the rough some additional ones which will give some idea of the colossal expenditures of money each year which the publication of all forms of literature and its twin sister news reports, which are more and more being written in the form of literature, entail. These experts figure that the publication, including illustrations of reading matter in all forms excepting books, in the United States involves an expenditure every year of not far from $200,000,000, and each year the sum thus expended is larger than that reported for the previous year.

There is no other expenditure of the American people outside of the actual necessaries of life which compares with this enormous sum, and as this expenditure for the most part represents a profit it is fair to infer that the American people spend now more than $200,000,000 a year for reading matter, and that this sum is to be constantly increased as the years pass.

It looks large in the aggregate, and yet when the population of the country is considered it is a comparatively trifling expenditure for each person. It is only $10 a year or a little more for each family, or $2 a person. When the population of the country reaches 100,000,000, it is probable that the annual American expenditure for reading matter, exclusive of books, will reach the enormous sum of $500,000,000.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

H. H. Osgood, of Tecumseh, was in our town Monday.

Geo. Reiley is "kicking around" under the weather. Wonder if the great fair was too much for him?

Philo Lossing has purchased the big roan team of Geo. Holloway, and will take them to Kalkaska, where he is moving with his family this week.

Henry Gamber, section foreman on the Wabash at this station, moved his family from Alvordton last week Friday; they are quartered over the store occupied by Maurice Nay.

Officer Lards and Charlie Randall, of Adrian, were in town last Friday, on the trial of Geo. Gilbert, who was implicated in the robbery at Randolph's Corner's, a day or two previous.

L. C. Winship is going to put a grinding attachment in his saw mill, and farmers in this vicinity will soon be able to have their grists ground while they wait, or "take a session on the Board of Trade."

The Lady Maccabees will give a Pie Social in their rooms, over Rothfuss & Brown's, on Saturday evening, this week. Everybody turn out and help the ladies. Remember this is a charitable as well as a fraternal order, and come; for "charity begins at home" and this is our home.

To be in the "best society" of Holloway, the male portion are required to wear the new Yachting Cap, as a mark distinguishing them from the "vulgar throng." The Mayor wears his tilted slightly down over the right eye, and covering the right ear almost entirely from the sight. N. B.—This mode of wearing it is patented and all infringements will be prosecuted.

In perusing the Adrian Press, of last week's issue, we ran across an article that we do not now recollect in its entirety, and as the Press is not at present within our reach, we will have to fall back on our memory, but it was on the fact that a Britton Nine were crowing over the way they had done up a Holloway Nine—72 to 13. We should think that instead of crowing they would be shedding tears of woe to know that Holloway was able to make 13 runs against the odds they had to encounter. In the first place the Britton Nine were boys from 14 to 17 years of age; large athletic fellows, with one exception, we think, not less than five feet tall, and thoroughly practiced in the game. The Holloway boys were all of 3 to 4 years younger, and with one or two exceptions a foot shorter in stature; this, coupled with the fact that they only played with 6 men on a side, and that the Holloway boys have had very little practice, changes the looks of things considerable. The Britton boys are very good and Can Play Ball, but we think it looks like a bully crowing over knocking down the smallest boy in school, to crow over such a game. The Britton's didn't have a man who was able to play all three bases and short stop, as Jimmie Snyder, of Holloway, did that day.

THAT LONG CONTEST.

REMARKABLE SCENES OF A NINE WEEKS' SENATE DEBATE.

An Analysis of the Flood of Oratory Occasioned by the Repeal Discussion. Three Thousand Pages of Eloquence. Amusing Incidents and Very Bad Puns.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—No more interesting and exciting debate than that which has just come to an end in the senate has ever been seen in the American congress. It has been indeed a remarkable debate—remarkable for its length, earnestness, occasional flashes of eloquence, sensational incidents and frequent personalities of a bitter and unparliamentary nature. For nine weeks the senate fought over the question of repeal, sitting every day but Sunday, meeting for the most part an hour or two earlier in the morning than is its custom, and on several occasions prolonging its session throughout the night.

The product of all this disputation is seen in that much abused but recently very interesting daily publication, The Congressional Record. For nine weeks the employees of The Record have been perhaps the hardest worked men in the capital. So much speechmaking has rendered it necessary for them to work over hours, and even now they are only catching up with the task imposed upon them by the flood of oratory. The Record has now reached its three thousand five hundredth page, and four-fifths of it is devoted to the debate in the senate. During this time the house has contributed but a small share of the words which made up this enormous aggregate. On the 20th of August, when the senate took up the repeal bill, The Record had reached only its eight hundred and fiftieth page, and fully one half of this had been contributed by the senate in its discussions of the financial situation which preceded the debate proper.

In all the senate has filled fully 3,000 pages with its wisdom concerning the finances. Think what a book these 3,000 pages make! It will have to be divided into three or four bound volumes of The Record, each volume three or four inches thick. Each page contains 2,000 words, or the equivalent of a column and a half in the average newspaper. This gives us a grand total of something like 6,000,000 of words—6,000,000 of words over a question on which nearly every senator had made up his mind as to how he would vote nine weeks ago. Imagine if you can a newspaper large enough to embrace the whole of this debate in the senate. It would consist of 600 pages, with seven columns to the page, or more than the numbers of the average eight page newspaper bound together in one unwieldy whole.

Fun For the Galleries.

I have not counted in The Record the number of times that Mr. Stewart addressed the chair, but taking an average throughout the whole period from a point ber of days during which I did count it is fair to say that he engaged to attend to the senate, to a greater or less extent, generally, about 500 times. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that on at least 500 of these occasions someone laughed right when Mr. Stewart arose. Some of this laughter was on the floor sometimes, in the galleries, but more frequently in both places together. As a rule Mr. Stewart was as quiet and as solemn as a man well could be, and yet the people laughed. They did not laugh at what he said, but at him, for the veteran senator from Nevada is wise as he always is, and sometimes eloquent, has had the misfortune to fall in that rut in the regard and estimation of his fellow senators and the occupants of the galleries in which everything he does seems funny.

Possibly the fact that Mr. Stewart resembles Pantaloon or Santa Claus or King Lear, as one's fancy may dictate, has something to do with the general merriment which accompanies his appearance in the debate. He cannot help looking like Pantaloon, Lear or Santa Claus and more than he can help saying, "Mr. President," and starting off on a speech at every opportunity. Neither of these things is his fault, but his misfortune, and misfortune it surely is, for nothing more surely weakens a statesman's influence in the body wherein he sits than to be always greeted with titters whenever he rises to speak.

Senator Stewart has been an actor in many exciting scenes of this long debate. One day he told Senator Dolph of Oregon, who is fond of nagging the senator from Nevada, that he (Dolph) did not know what he was talking about. On another occasion he told Senator Palmer of Illinois, who is also exceedingly fond of addressing the senate, that if Mr. Palmer could not talk sense he had better not talk at all, whereupon Senator Palmer rejoined that the senator from Nevada did more than his share of the talking, but that what he said was principally wind.

Out of Order.

Senator Palmer had an unfortunate habit of becoming involved in little controversies with other senators. Once he went too far and was promptly called to order. It was during the long speech of Mr. Allen, when Mr. Palmer interjected some remarks and complained of the delay and the inability of the senate to reach a vote, speaking of certain senators who made long speeches simply for the purpose of obstruction. A number of senators asked the Illinois sage to be more specific in his allegations and Senator Palmer, nothing loath, promptly replied that the "Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Allen, for instance," when upon Mr. Palmer was called to order and required to take his seat. It was charged that he had violated the rules of the senate in thus making a charge against the good faith of another senator. There was a long debate about the matter, in which Mr. Palmer's colleague from Illinois, though a Republican, endeavored to excuse the offender. Finally Mr. Palmer made what could be construed as an apology, and the subject was dropped.

There was an interesting controversy between Senators Butler and Hill in which the former was also called to order and required to take his seat while the objectionable words were read by the official reporter. Mr. Butler, in his fiery way, had said to the senator from New York that inasmuch as the latter appeared to have his friends stationed in the gallery to applaud his remarks, it would be better for them to adjourn to the nearest street corner and "have it out." Senator Manderson of Nebraska thought the senator from South Carolina was inviting the senator from New York to settle their controversy by a resort to pugilism, and therefore called Mr. Butler to order. Explanations followed, in which it appeared that Mr. Butler had not desired to beat Mr. Hill with his fists, but with his tongue in a joint debate of the stump speech variety. Then this matter was dropped also.

A Serious Tilt.

More sensational and more serious was the tilt between Senators Morgan and Washburn. Senator Washburn is of an excitable temperament, No senator was more eager than he for the passage of the unconditional repeal bill. He had no patience with those senators who blocked the way for so long a time, and some of his remarks, public and private, were exceedingly bitter. One day he criticised the senator from Alabama in a way which aroused that gentleman's ire, and Mr. Morgan, in his quiet, calm way, apparently without much feeling, but with the fires burning deep within, explained that he was responsible for what he said "both here and elsewhere."

Mr. Morgan was not called to order, but his words created a genuine sensation. Senators looked at one another as if inquiring if they were to have a duel on their hands. A vision of pistols, surgeons, a secluded spot in the woods, puffs of smoke and a great statesman prone and blood soaked upon the grass flitted before their eyes. But it was only a dream. Mr. Morgan and Mr. Washburn were the next day chatting together in the cloak room as if nothing had happened.

Pugnacious and Emphatic.

Senator Harris raised almost as many laughs during the debate as Mr. Stewart. Senator Harris does not make long speeches, nor many speeches of any sort, but whenever he thinks the parliamentary proprieties have been offended, or that there is the slightest doubt as to what is the precise order of business, Mr. Harris comes to the front. Ordinarily in discussions of this sort senators are calm and matter of fact, but not so with the pugnacious statesman from Tennessee. On the most commonplace points of a parliamentary nature he rushes in as if mounted upon a charger, spear in rest, lance and helmet fixed, ready to mow down the enemy. An ordinary visitor in the gallery watching Mr. Harris explain the parliamentary situation would naturally think him consumed with anger and ready to fight any one who dared question his statements.

One day, at the conclusion of a roll call, Mr. Harris exclaimed, "Mr. President," meaning thereby that he wished to have his name called for the purpose of voting. "The senator from Kansas," said the vice president, using the word Kansas for Tennessee by mistake. Mr. Harris was standing in the central aisle at the moment, and when he heard Vice President Stevenson assign him to the state of Kansas instead of his own dearly beloved state of Tennessee, he turned, cast a withering glance upon the presiding officer, drew himself up proudly to his full height, raised his hand menacingly and turned toward with his deep voice, "The senator from where?"

Humor in Senator Hoar.

Senator Hoar of Massachusetts—whom the men in the press gallery have irreverently dubbed "Grandma," nudging one another when Mr. Hoar rises and speaking of catnip tea and lace caps and knitting needles—has also become somewhat of a humorist. One day the vice president had made a certain ruling as to the order of business. It was not of much importance, but what little significance it had was favorable to the Democratic side of the chamber. Therefore every one was surprised as well as amused when Mr. Hoar walked down to the open space in front of the presiding officer's desk and exclaimed in his shrill, squeaky voice, "Mr. President, I am sorry to say the hair is right." What he said was striking enough, but his manner of saying it was excruciatingly funny.

It remained for Senator Cockrell of Missouri to perpetrate the worst pun known to the long debate. The senate was voting on one of the amendments and Senator Vilas of Wisconsin had made a statement concerning a transfer of the pair which he had with another senator. Mr. Cockrell was interested in the matter and after briefly explaining his position said there was no doubt as to how the senator from Wisconsin would vote on the amendment, because it was as "Vilas" the bill itself. The happiest pun which the debate developed was that of Senator Wolcott of Colorado, who spoke of senators who were always talking of their devotion to the cause of bimetallism, and at the same time voting for a gold standard. "They are bimetallists," exclaimed Mr. Wolcott, "sweet by and by metallists," a hit which raised a general laugh in the chamber.

Sent For Mr. Peffer.

These are only a few of the thousands of incidents and humors of the repeal campaign. There was the remarkable speech of Senator Sherman, the Nestor of the senate, in which he arraigned the other side of the chamber for its inaction, a speech which helped to bring on the final result. There were speeches by Senators Teller and Wolcott which almost brought tears to the eyes of the listeners when they described the sufferings and hardships which the people of the silver producing states would have to undergo. There was the speech of Mr. Peffer, with a stack of books before him that reached to his chin, and upon the top of which he balanced the bowl of soup with which he occasionally refreshed himself much to the disarrangement of his long whiskers. There was the speech of Don Cameron, made with head bent over his manuscript and in a voice that was not audible a dozen feet away, the first speech which Mr. Cameron has made in 12 years.

There was the happy use of metaphor on the part of Mr. Voorhees, the leader of the repeal campaign. Once Mr. Voorhees declared he would rather be carried from the senate chamber feet foremost and be laid in his grave cut in Indiana than to surrender this fight. After the failure of his pet spiral test sector Mr. Voorhees came up smiling with the declaration that he was like the famous John Paul Jones. "When the enemy had riddled Jones' ship with shot and shell and stopped firing long enough to ask the dauntless commander if he was ready to surrender, John Paul had seized his speaking trumpet and shouted across the waters: 'Surrender? Surrender? I have only begun to fight!'"

The happiest and most graceful of all metaphor used by Mr. Voorhees in this remarkable struggle was near the end of the contest, when he turned toward Senator Teller, who sat with bowed head and drawn features across the aisle, exclaiming, "I say to the vanquished leader of the opposition forces, the senator from Colorado, that we are proud to pay him the honors of war and salute his flag as he passes defeated from the field of battle."

A HIGH OLD TIME.

How Students at Ann Arbor Observed Halloween.

Street Cars Egged and Property Confiscated and Used to Feed a Big Bonfire—Several Arrested and Fined.

ON A RAMPAGE.

ANN ARBOR, Nov. 1.—Six hundred students shortly after midnight painted Ann Arbor a lurid hue. A bonfire on the campus consumed a toolhouse, all the neighboring fences and much portable property. A street car was rotten-egged and stoned and an effigy put on the track. Ann Arbor's police force of two men was unable to quiet the howling mob. The mayor was out of the city and the marshal had just been suspended by the mayor. Many private residences had plate glass windows broken by stones. One young lady had her neck filled with powdered glass. Officers arrested two students at the campus dragging a wagon to the bonfire and hurried them on an electric car, which started full speed toward the jail, pursued by the whole body of students, who stoned the car, breaking nearly all the windows. The students were safely landed in jail. Two other arrests were made. Each of the offenders was fined $10 and costs. The students gave assumed names, but one is known to belong to the law school, one to the medical school and two to the literary department.

BANQUET TO EDWIN F. UHL.

Grand Rapids Fellow Citizens Honor the New Assistant Secretary.

GRAND RAPIDS, Nov. 5.—The Jefferson club gave a banquet Saturday night to Edwin F. Uhl, recently appointed assistant secretary of state, and it was one of the most notable banquets ever given here. The attendance was about 200, including all the best known local democrats and many from out of town. Rev. Dr. Charles Fluhrer invoked the Divine blessing. President Maurice Shannahan welcomed the guests and Judge John W. Champlin acted as toastmaster. Speeches were made by Judge A. B. Morse, consul at Glasgow, who is home on a visit; Robert E. Bunker, Muskegon; I. M. Turner, Thomas E. Barkworth, Jackson; John E. More, Thomas F. McGarry, Frank H. Gill, Peter Doran, Charles M. Heald, Dr. G. K. Johnson and others, and Mr. Uhl closed the evening with an able address.

MICHIGAN HARBORS.

FIRE AT SAGINAW.

A Big Lumber Yard Destroyed—Loss $13,500.

SAGINAW, Nov. 6.—Fire broke out in the lumber yard of Melchers & Nerreter at Crow Island Sunday and a brisk wind fanned the flames. For a time it looked as if the village was doomed. The direction of the wind finally changed, and the fire was confined to the yard, in which 2,000,000 feet of lumber was piled. All this was burned but 200,000 feet, and the loss will be $13,500.

Nearly Asphyxiated.

GRAND RAPIDS, Nov. 5. The jurors in the Blakeslee case were forced to remain locked up all night before reaching a verdict. They fell asleep one by one, and some member turned off the gas in an incomplete way, allowing it to escape. About midnight one of the jurors awoke, and, feeling queer, he attempted to rise and found his head very heavy. With difficulty he reached the gas jet and turned it off. The other jurors were partly suffocated and it was more than an hour before all of them fully recovered.

Has a New Field.

GRAND RAPIDS, Nov. 6.—L. C. P. Hintz, factory inspector for Kent county, has received notice from State Labor Commissioner Morse that his territory has been increased so that it includes about ten counties in the western part of the lower peninsula. Mr. Hintz's jurisdiction now extends south to Kalamazoo, east to Charlotte and north to Big Rapids. The inspector will begin work in this new territory November 13.

A Victim of Apoplexy.

DETROIT, Nov. 3.—Col. Gilbert S. Jennings, U. S. A., retired, was found unconscious in his room by members of his family Wednesday morning. A gas jet was turned on full and the room was filled with gas. He died at 11 o'clock Wednesday night. The colonel was fully dressed, and it is supposed that he suffered a stroke of apoplexy while turning on the gas and was unable to light it.

Charged with the Poisoning.

DETROIT, Nov. 3.—Thomas Hazlip, of this city, died at the home of his brother, John Hazlip, in Buffalo, last Sunday. The brother reported to the police at Buffalo to-day that Thomas had been poisoned by his wife, who was visiting there with him, by administering a mixture of her own instead of the medicine ordered by the physician. Mrs. Hazlip hysterically denied the charge.

Lost His Suit.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 4.—The district supreme court has decided against Harry Smith in his copyright suit. Mr. Smith had copyrighted the Congressional Digest, which he prepared while house journal clerk, and then sued his successor, Mr. Crutchfield, for utilizing portions of its contents in a later digest.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

LAWYER AND CLIENT.

WHY CRIMINALS SHOULD CONFESS TO THEIR COUNSEL.

Results of Cases Where Facts Were Concealed—A Lawyer's Mistaken Confidence. Circumstantial Evidence and Conviction. False Statement That Led to Death.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—The sensational scene at the court of general sessions in this city the other day, where a lawyer named Purdy swallowed the contents of a bottle containing "knocker out" to save a client, again brings up the question, "Do criminals confess to their lawyers?"

In the case referred to, a man was arrested for robbery by the use of the old time weapon known as "knocker out." At the trial the district attorney pointed out the danger that menaced the public from this drug, it being worse than the sandbag or blackjack in the hands of a highwayman. "There is enough poison in these bottles," he continued, pointing to the concoctions, "to kill a small army."

"Nonsense," was the reply of Lawyer Purdy, the prisoner's counsel, "and I will prove it." He thereupon poured the stuff down his throat while the prisoner involuntarily started from his seat.

A smile settled upon the lawyer's face as he held the empty bottle above his head. He thought he had won his case. But it was only for an instant. In the next he turned ghastly pale, his legs trembled, and he fell into a chair in a drowsy swoon.

The jury brought in a verdict of guilty without leaving their seats.

Why Criminals Do Not Confess.

But having set out on a career of folly the criminal is not to be expected to exhibit a great degree of wisdom in extricating himself from the consequences of his acts. And one of the chief follies which he commits when summoned to answer to the community for his misdeeds is to conceal the real facts of his case from the counsel whom he selects to defend him. This selection is not difficult, because in every community the ablest criminal counsel are well known and are especially well known to law breakers. But when a person charged with crime has put himself in relations with a lawyer he usually hampers the abilities of his counsel at the outset by declaring his innocence, even if, as a matter of fact, he is guilty "as charged in the indictment."

That the criminal does not as a rule state the exact facts of his case to counsel proceeds from these causes, among others:

He is not intelligent enough to see that it is for his interest to tell the truth and the whole truth.

He is suspicious of the entire and absolute integrity of even the most famous counsel.

He is afraid that if he makes a full confession to his lawyer, the latter will, if not voluntarily, perhaps by an unguarded expression, let the precious secret slip.

He fears that the zeal of his counsel will be quenched or his faculties obscured if he knows that his client is guilty and just how the criminal act was accomplished.

The natural desire of every man to stand as high as possible in the estimation of those with whom he comes in contact operates also in inducing the criminal to deceive his counsel. Separated from the world by stone walls—seeing, with the exception of his counsel, only keepers who despise him and prisoners who regard him as one caged felon always regards another—he involuntarily longs for the respect of the superior person who occasionally visits him in the discharge of professional duty, and with whom he is permitted to converse in a separate room at a table, as one citizen with another, free from the restraint of an iron barred door.

Owing to these and other unwholesome inducements, a criminal awaiting trial usually lies to his lawyer.

It is a fatal mistake, one of those blunders that are worse than crimes. Jonathan Wild, the great thief taker and thief teacher, was wont to inculcate to his pupils in larceny the policy of uniformly adhering to truth wherever truth was practicable. His argument was that truth required but little effort of memory, that it was always consistent with fact, required no invention and was therefore easy to the feeblest intellect, and that, finally, a lie was so precious and valuable a thing that it should never be wasted, never brought into use unless absolutely necessary.

Facts and Theories.

The most ingeniously constructed false narrative has a larger or smaller spot of rottenness and decay on its surface—

Rank corruption mining all within Infects unseen.

And the rude assaults of the cross examination by the public prosecutor soon convert the whole ulcerous tissue into a mass of debris fit only to be shoveled out of the courtroom. It requires great talent, far beyond the modicum at the command of the average criminal, to frame a fictitious condition of events that shall consist with the obvious and undisputed facts that are connected with any crime whatever.

Every crime is a fact, and every fact that has ever occurred in the history of the world is more or less directly connected with infinitely numerous contemporary facts, many of which are capable of being used as evidence. To suppress real facts and invent others is, therefore, like taking away parts of some delicate and intricate machine and substituting others. Only the most skillful of artificers could reasonably attempt such a task, and even he would be apt to come short of his designs.

The most experienced advocates say that no false theory of innocence of a crime can be supported if the attendant facts happen to be numerously testified to by witnesses for the people; therefore, the accused person, if guilty, should state to his counsel the exact facts of the crime, in order that they may be toned down, qualified or explained away. Aside from the reasonable nature of this theory, the prisoner is placed toward the court and jury in a more favorable attitude, since his defense does not combat the entire truth, but only tends to shed a different light upon it from that of the prosecution.

There have been during the past two years two memorable murder trials in the city of New York, both carried on by the people wholly on circumstantial evidence, both for crimes of similar character, and both resulting in conviction on dissimilar schemes of defense—in one case the defendant testifying in his own behalf, in the other case declining the witness chair—and the public have believed that in each case material facts were withheld from counsel, thus disqualifying them from dwelling upon or explaining away incriminating circumstances clearly proved. Nothing is so dangerous to a defense as an apparition of a hostile fact which an advocate dare not deny, and in fact cannot on competent evidence deny, and is unable to explain because the falsehoods of his client have ignored it.

A Case In Point.

A murder committed in the sixties in the neighborhood of the picnic grounds of Jones' Wood in the city of New York affords an illustration of this truth. Watts and Nevins were both young men, reputed dissolute, but not criminal characters, and more or less regularly at work as journeymen compositors in printing offices. Nevins had recently come into a legacy of a few hundred dollars and had stated to his fellow workmen that he calculated upon enjoying life while the sum lasted in some other way than in setting type, and he were intimates and roomed in the same house in Sixty-third street, not far from the picnic grounds. Both were frequent attendants at the rude dancing parties held at the grounds.

It was on a dark evening in August that they both appeared in the grounds when the East Side Star association was holding its annual rather disorderly picnic, at which no introductions were necessary to secure partners. Nevins fell in with a girl whom he wished to startle with the unaccustomed treat of a bottle of champagne, and about 11 o'clock he set out for his room, where he had his stock of money, in order to replenish his pockets. He told Watts that he was going home for that purpose and would soon return. He was seen by one of the barkeepers in the act of leaving the platform. A regular attendant at the Wood, he was well known, and having been the only champagne customer on this evening he was noticed. Watts followed him almost instantly and was seen to go down the platform stairs. The gatekeeper recognized Nevins when going out but had no recollection as to Watts.

Next morning Nevins was found dead on the floor of his room, a cleft in his skull and a bloody hatchet near him, with which the murder had been committed. He had not returned to the picnic, but Watts had appeared on the platform, and when he came up he obtained a glass of brandy and peppermint from the bar, saying that he was troubled with diarrhea and had just come up from the outbuildings. As soon as the death of Nevins was discovered the police were notified, and one of their first acts was to put Watts under arrest as the person last seen with the deceased. Watts was found in bed in his room at 11 o'clock, apparently asleep. He explained his presence in his room at that late hour by stating that he had not returned from the Wood until daybreak, and that his regular turn as a compositor did not require him until 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Convincing Evidence.

At the station house, before being taken to the police court at 2 p. m., he was searched under protest, and nearly $30 were found in his pocketbook. This was not a large sum of money, and still it is more than most compositors carry at the middle of the week. At the police court he declined to answer any questions except the formal inquiries as to place of birth, age, occupation, etc., and although the evidence against him was slight the magistrate held him for the grand jury.

Watts, when committed to the city prison to await trial, sent for a lawyer noted for his ability and gave him $200 in bank notes. The possession of this amount of money by a journeyman printer excited no comment on the part of the lawyer. Nothing is more usual than that impecunious and worthless fellows, when confined on grave charges, should be well supplied with money from sources unknown to the public and even to their own counsel. A man who could not pay a note of $50 may be able to give his lawyer a retainer of some hundreds. The fact was that Watts had the bulk of Nevins' money in his stocking when arrested, and that the preliminary search at the station house had not been thorough, suspicion being light. After committal, prisoners are only searched for dangerous weapons, not being allowed even a pocket knife, for fear of suicide.

Watts instructed his counsel that, while he knew of the departure of Nevins from the platform, he did not follow him home, and that as a matter of fact he did not go home till daybreak and knew nothing about the murder of Nevins. All defenses of innocent people are essentially negative, as this was, the prisoner not being called on to show who the real culprits are but only to combat evidences or presumptions of his own guilt.

Counsel's Hands Tied.

The prisoner in this instance concealed the truth from his counsel, mainly because he relied on the absence of testimony on the part of the prosecution. But between the dates of commitment and trial much evidence pointing to Watts' guilt came into the possession of the district attorney. None of this was known to the prisoner's counsel except the testimony of the gatekeeper before the grand jury that a young man in a dark coat and straw hat passed out of the Wood gate directly after Nevins had gone through, coupled with that of the barkeeper that Watts wore a dark coat and straw hat on that night. But this evidence was treated by the prisoner as amounting to nothing, because a large number of the young men at such summer picnics wear dark coats and straw hats, and such alleged identification amounts to nothing. But other evidence had been procured by the district attorney after the finding of the indictment that pointed strongly to a guilty knowledge on the part of the prisoner, of which neither he nor his counsel knew anything.

By his false statements as to the occurrences the prisoner so thoroughly tied his counsel's hands that no amount of cross examination of the people's witnesses or of ingenious argument before the jury could be expected to avert a verdict of guilty. Watts was convicted and executed, making a full confession before he went to the gallows.

An innocent defendant cannot of course acknowledge crimes of which he is not guilty, and when he tells the truth to his counsel all the facts as he states them will be found to be in harmony with the entire body of facts that make up the case. Under no circumstances then can the innocent prisoner make any mistake in telling his counsel the whole truth. And as for the guilty defendant, when he has secured able counsel, and finds himself protected by superior talents as well as by the safeguards thrown around him by modern statutes, he can commit no greater error than to "deny that which is and to explain that which is not."

GALVANIZED because the alleged steel mills put out very inexperienced men, of factories have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor. In this year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor loss is proportionately much less than any wooden wheel. While the loss of the ... steel ones has frequently been total.

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermotor. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country." Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often ... 8 weeks to be filled, but we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, extraordinary scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pay freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put to a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you can climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO., 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

AFTER THE FAIR.

"JACKSON PARK, Nov. 5, 1893.

The life of the Columbian Guard has lost its charm. Sadly he paces the length of his deserted beat. No more is he beseiged with questions from a hundred thousand persons daily. The Waukesha water girls have gone: the beauty show is robbed of its beauty. The dark-eyed girls from the Orient no longer charm the gay visitor to the Midway. The camels and donkeys of Cairo street are taking a long rest. The [illegible] called upon to show "all their splendid plumage" to the thousands who daily visited them in other days. The Indian war dances are over and the Chinese tom-tom is silent. It is on account of all these things that the Guard feels that life is not worth living. The change is so sudden and so great. A week ago he listened to the joyous voices of the multitude of pleasure seekers, to-day he hears only the sound of the workman's hammer.

The locomotive sends up a smoky cloud where once the electric fountains played their brilliant streams. The work of destruction progresses rapidly. Tracks are laid to all the exhibit buildings; a great many exhibits are already moved and the work of packing goes on at a marvelous rate. One is reminded now of the first weeks of the fair, except that the grounds are in much better shape, and instead of mud we have clouds of dust.

Most of the inhabitants of the foreign villages have left for home. Nearly all of them were checked back to New York by a representative of the United States government. The little people from Java left Thursday, going by way of San Francisco. Egyptians, Algerians and Dahomeyans went Wednesday.

By order of the director general the Midway was closed to visitors, Thursday. The Ferris Wheel kept right on rolling, and it is said the company will bring suit against the exposition for damages.

Considerable trouble is occasioned by the refusal of some of the concessionaries to pay the per centages due to the Exposition, and several places are now in the hands of the sheriff and protected by the Columbian Guard. The beautiful weather greatly facilitates the moving of exhibits and exhibitors are making the most of it. There is something pathetic in the destruction of the beautiful fair, and at first it gave me a sort of "thenextdayafterafuneral" feeling to walk through the deserted grounds, but one gets over that and learns to take it all as a matter of course. This has been a beautiful day of hazy Indian Summer, and I have spent several hours wandering through the different buildings. The elevators are still running in the manufacturer's building, and the few visitors were taking advantage of the opportunity to get a last view of the fading glory of the fair from that wonderful promenade on the roof.

Last evening I happened around at the Algerian village. Seven or eight of the people who are detained here in the settlement of their business, had gathered in a room and were singing wierd songs accompanied by strange music on a violin and a sort of tambourine or drum, which they beat with the fingers. I could imagine, as they sat there surrounded by thick clouds of cigarette smoke, just how they felt, as they sang their home songs, thinking of the friends who had gone before and looking forward to the time when they will all meet in their own native land. They have complained greatly of the cold, and those who left, went out from the grounds shouting "Chicago no good, Good bye Chicago."

Some of the Arabs are here yet, and as I write, I can see two of them sitting out in the sun smoking. Their pipe is quite complicated. A large glass bottle or jar is half filled with water, and the bowl of the pipe forms the stopper. From the bowl a tube runs down into the water. Another opening on the side of the bottle near the top is connected with a flexible tube four or five feet long, at the end of which is the mouth piece of the pipe. Thus the smoke is drawn through the water which boils the nicotine. They wet the tobacco before filling the pipe, and keep it burning by placing a small piece of burning charcoal on top of it. The bottle is placed on the ground and the smoker usually sits cross-legged on a rug, on the ground, as far away from the pipe as his tube will reach.

I don't know what I have done to the Editor of the Herald that he should give me away, in that letter from Chicago. I had hoped to number him among my friends, but the hope is dashed to earth. It was bad enough to know that some of my friends charged me with writing letters for the paper, but to come out in such a public way was too much, and I take this opportunity to warn S. C. S. that I shall not be responsible for any serious consequences.

SHE SLEEPS WELL.

The LaPorte, Ind., Daily Herald, of Oct. 25th, contains the following brief obituary mention of Mrs. Wm. E. Randall. Mr. Randall was one of the pionee merchants of Tecumseh, having conducted a dry goods store here as early as 1836. The family resided for many years in the house now occupied by A. L. Brewer. The deceased was a woman of rare intellectual and womanly gifts and was a universal favorite among those who knew her. She will be kindly remembered and her death will be lamented by many of our older residents.

Mrs. Laura B., wife of the late Wm. E. Randall, silently departed this life at 11:55 o'clock this morning at the family residence, 104 Jefferson street. She was 79 years old. Her illness dates back to one year ago last July, when she was attacked with nervous prostration, from the effects of which she never recovered. The close of life came without a struggle.

Deceased was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert and was born in Ridgefield, Conn., in 1814. She was married to William E. Randall at the place of her birth, June 22, 1835. In 1853, with her husband, she moved to this city, where she had since resided. In 1861 they moved to the home on Jefferson street, where she quietly died. Her husband's demise took place in May, 1890. There were four children, only one of whom, Gilbert B., is living.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, Friday afternoon at two o'clock. Rev. E. D. Daniels will officiate. Interment at Pine lake cemetary. No flowers.

A Valuable Book.

Dr. E. Hause has obtained the agency for Lenawee county, for a new book which is bound to have a large sale. It is entitled "The Higher Officials of the United States", and shows the buildings in which all laws are made.

It contains portraits, size 4x5 1-2 inches, of the President, Vice-President, all the Cabinet officers, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Major-Generals of the Army, the Rear-Admirals of the Navy, and Governors of all the States and Territories, with a complete history of each official's life and a fac-simile of their signatures.

The book also contains pictures, 6x9, of all the State and Territorial Capital buildings, and gives a brief history of each building, the new battle ship "Iowa," which will be, when built, the finest and most powerful in the navy.

Each Governor's portrait appears on the page opposite the Capital building of his state.

In the book will also be found the salary of each official, and the vote in each state at the last presidential election, and a history of the Supreme Court of the United States from the time it was organized to the present time.

The pictures of official and buildings are all copper etchings made from photographs recently taken, and are the finest that can be made.

The pages of this book are 9x12, printed on very heavy enameled paper, bound in morocco, with elegant large gilt title on cover.

The price of the book is only $2.00 and at this moderate figure it ought to find a place in every household.

Among hundreds of testimonials, we select the following:

ROSWELL P. FLOWER, Gov. of N. Y.

"I am much pleased with the work. I think a perusal of its pages should animate our young men with a desire to gain higher honors. The history of the Governors and higher officials as briefly sketched in this book carries with it the opinion that nearly all have attained to their present rank through their own energy and exertions."

W. J. MCCONNELL, Gov. of Idaho.

"It is perhaps not becoming for one whose portrait and biography appears in the work to make favorable comments, but it cannot be denied that such a book will find a welcome place in the libraries of many of our people. It is educative as well as a source of pleasure to lovers of the artistic."

L. D. LEWELLING, Gov. of Kansas.

"The Higher Officials of the United States is not only a beautiful work of art possessing many unique features, but is also a valuable biographical and historical work which reflect credit on the author and publishers, and deserves a large patronage."

B. R. TILLMAN, Gov. of South Carolina.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has been induced to revive "Little Lord Fauntleroy" in a series of articles just completed for The Ladies' Home Journal, in which she tells "How Fauntleroy Really Occurred," and traces the story, the development of the character as he lived under her own eyes, and described Fauntleroy as he is to-day—her own son.

Resolutions.

Negaunee, Mich., Sept. 15th, 1893.

Whereas, The pastoral relation that has existed between the Rev. Chas. M. Brown and the First Presbyterian church, of Negaunee, Mich., has been dissolved; and

Whereas, His work during his pastorate of five and one half years, has been greatly blessed as has been shown in the increased membership of this church, eighty-eight having been added since he came to us; in the increased financial strength of the church until the present panic: over $21,000 having been raised for all church purposes; in the deeper, more earnest, and more consecrated spiritual life prevading the church; in the work of the church generally, being harmonious and prosperous, its elders, trustees, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Missionary and Aid Societies having confidence in his good sense and judgement, cooperated cordially with him in advancing the interest of the kingdom of righteousness and peace; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the members of this church and congregation do assure him that his services in our behalf are deeply appreciated and that we sincerely and heartily thank him for the good he has done in our midst in watching and caring faithfully for the flock the Master has given to lead, so that not even the hundredth one should go astray; in breaking with us the bread of life; in working earnestly in public, in private, by writing, by personal exhortation for our spiritual good, in our trials and affliction, as vicar of Christ, "bearing our griefs and carrying our sorrows" in his great sympathizing heart; and for building us up intellectually, materially and spiritually by his faithful and loving regard for the trust committed to his care; and further

RESOLVED, That we regretfully and sorrowfully sunder the ties that have been so dear; yet we rejoice that our loss is another's gain, and that in a larger vineyard much more fruit will be brought in and laid at the Masters feet.

Signed in behalf of the congregation by Having used three bottles of P. P. P. for impure blood and general weakness, and having derived great benefits from the same, having gained 11 pounds in weight in four weeks, I take great pleasure in recommending it to all unfortunates like Yours truly,

JOHN MORRIS,

ORLANDO, Fla., April 20, '91.

Messrs. Lippman Bros., Savannah, Ga.:

Dear Sirs:—I sold three bottles of P. P. P., large size yesterday, and one bottle small size to-day.

The P. P. cured my wife of rheumatism winter before last. It came back on her the past winter and a half bottle, $100 size, relieved her again, and she has not had a symptom since.

I sold a bottle of P. P. P. to a friend of mine, one of his turkeys, a small one took sick, and his wife gave it a table spoonful, that was in the evening, and the little fellow turned over like he was dead, but next morning was up hollowing and well. Yours respectfully,

J. N. McELROY.

A Puritan Dinner.

In arranging the table care must be be taken to seat the increased family so that especially congenial relatives may be near together, writes Frances E. Lanigan in an article describing and giving the menu of "A Puritan Thanksgiving Dinner" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. If the gathering is a very large one it may be well to set a separate table for the children—an arrangement which is sure to meet with great favor from the juvenile element. In the decoration of the table use yellow chrysanthemums and, if it can be obtained, goldenrod. A better arrangement still is the use of wheat and dried grasses as more typical of the festival. Two large, flat bowls of highly-polished red apples should stand at either end of the centre piece, while small dishes of popped corn, home-made molases candy, roasted chestnuts and cracked hickorynuts should be in convenient places about the table. Pickled walnuts, cucumber pickles and small cruets of tomato ketchup should form the hors d'œuvre. At each plate there may be a guest card of as much simplicity or ornateness as may be desired. A clever design is a turkey in pasteboard with outstrecahed tail, on which the name of the guest, with Thanksgiving Day, 1893, may be done in old-fashioned script lettering. Sheaves of wheat are also appropriate designs. If it is desired the menu may be placed upon the back of the card. Appropriate quotations add much to the personality of a guest card, and a few from New England authors may be given.

The menu of the dinner is as follows:

Clam Chowder

Fish
Roast Codfish — Boiled Potatoes

Entree
Pork and Beans

Roast
Turkey — Onion Sauce
Cranberry Jelly
Baked Ham

Mashed Potatoes — Baked Squash
Buttered Parsnips

Game
or
Roast Sucking Pig
Red Cranberry Jelly

Salad
Cold Slaw

Brown Bread — Cream Cheese

Dessert
Mince Pie — Pumpkin Pie
Apple Pie — Baked Indian Pudding

Twenty-four members of Mrs. Geo. Herrold's Sabbath school class met at her home Thursday eve., for a reunion. Miss Griswold has been a teacher for many years. The class spent an enjoyable evening and wish their teacher many anniversaries of the event.

The High School and Village football teams played their third game Tuesday afternoon. The field had been nicely laid out, new goal posts erected and the ground cleaned of all sticks and stones. Considerable delay was occasioned by five of the high school boys failing to materalize. Substitutes were finally picked from the crowd, and the school still in rather a crippled condition, although the new men acquitted themselves well. In the first half the Village team made a goal from touchdown. The ball was put in play again and the Villagers were as quickly forced to their own goal where they made a safety. In the second half the Village made a touchdown, failing goal. The High School made a long run carrying the ball to within five yards of their opponents goal and at the next rush it went in, no goal. The Village kicked the game and the High School was unable to handle its rush line and another touchdown was scored by the Village. Score 6 to 14. We understand that the winning eleven will play a game with the Adrian High School on Sutter's grounds next Tuesday.

People returning from Chicago have of late been afflicted with what has been been popularly termed the World's Fair Grip. Doctors say that it is nothing dangerous, but is extremely unpleasant, and is certainly as near as first-cousin to LaGrippe.

The Lenawee County Mutual Protective Association elected the following officers at their meeting in Adrian Saturday:

The death of Dr. Fred R. Seger, of Adrian, last week cast a gloom over that entire city. Dr. Seger was but thirty-one years of age, and it is safe to say that but few men at his age have had such honors paid to their memory. The funeral was held Sunday, the rites of the Knights Templar and Knights of Pythias being observed.

The Adrian Telegram says: Hurrah for Adrian. A letter received from Elmer D. Smith, who is attending the great Chrysanthemum show, at Chicago, states that his flowers have taken four first prizes, four seconds, and two-thirds in all aggregating about $200. He would have taken more prizes if some of his blooms had not been damaged in transit.

Walter A. Robinson and company are playing a week's engagement at the Opera House. They appeared Monday in "The Postmaster," Tuesday in "My Geraldine" and last night in "Circumstantial Evidence." To-night every one will have a chance to laugh and grow fat by witnessing "The Major." To-morrow night "Lost in New York" will be given.

The Republicans had their innings in Tuesday's elections. Mayor Pingree is re-elected mayor of Detroit, but the Democrats elect Levi T. Griffin to congress by a good majority. Gov. McKinlay carried Ohio, as everybody expected he would. The Tammany tiger receives a blow in New York that will disfigure the animal for some time. The scandelous nomination of Judge Maynard invited defeat in that State, and the Tammany ring has received a rebuke which ought to teach it a lesson. Gov. Boies' defeat in Iowa was unexpected and is much to be regretted.

The firm which has purchased the Wm. McCowen furniture stock is composed of John D. Kinney and F. P. Simonds. The benefit concert for the W. C. T. U. on the evening of the 17th will consist of a varied program. Prof. Harold Jarvis will sing and there will also be good instrumental music and elocutionary readings.

Alex. Richard has the repairs on his house finished and is now very nicely domiciled in his new home. His Raisin friends should bear in mind that he is a resident of this village now and will vote in Tecumseh hereafter.

Harry Hanford was at home the fore part of the week for a brief visit. He is now acting as agent for the National Loan & Investment Co., of Detroit, with Western Pennsylvania for his territory. He is working up a fine business for the company in that section.

Grant Fellows and Seth Bean got into an altercation in open court the other day, and indulged in some rather unprofessional language. His Honor, Judge Lane, who is accustomed to running his own court, fined them $10.00 each for contempt and they probably feel better now.

Five of our local sportsmen dropped off the C. J. & M. mixed train Monday morning. Which part of the train they rode on, or where they had been, we know not, but they reported that they left the quail they saw until some future time when they hoped they'd be larger—whether for target or eating, again we don't know.

Laundred Collars and Cuffs 10 and 15c. Silk Ties 25c. Anderson & Co.

The surprise reception given Major Howell, in Adrian Tuesday evening, was in every sense a success. T. J. Joslyn made the opening address. Response by Col. Kline of Ann Arbor, at the close of which he presented our popular Major with an elegant sword in behalf of the 2nd. battalion. The surprise was complete. The guests enjoyed a pleasant dance after the reception, and those who went from here report an elegant time. Capt. Hayden, Lieut. McClure, Color Sergt. Will Bidwell, Hospital Steward D. T. Hall, Harry Tansley, Geo. Benneway, Frank Purdy, Alen Titus and Stewart and Simeon Boyd represented Co. C.

John J. Orr as agent for Nathan Smith & Son's, florists of Adrian, has on exhibition at his store some of the finest chrysanthemums ever shown in this vicinity. Smith & Son's have acquired a reputation for the culture of this beautiful flower, second to none, and to those wishing the flowers or plants, we can say that it is unnecessary to send to Chicago or Detroit for them, as one would be hard to please if not satisfied with those shown here. Mr. Smith had a large assortment of chrysanthemums at the world's fair, in competition with the world's best, and secured eleven awards for superiority. Prizes were given as follows: Vase of 50 blooms, yellow. Vase 50 blooms, crimson. Best 12 varieties, 1 flower each. Best 12 flowers, Chinese incurved. Best 6 flowers, same. Best 12 anemones, distinct varieties. Best 6 same. Best 6 vases 12 flowers, one variety each. Best vase 12 flowers, pink. Best vase 12 flowers, crimson. Nearly 200 ladies thronged Orr's drug store Tuesday to see the exhibit. In the evening the whole collection was taken to the Presbyterian church during the installation ceremonies, and attracted universal comment and admiration. Mr. Orr expects another collection in the near future.

Fred Hall went to Toledo Monday.

See our window "Saturday" of Gents Laundered Collars and Cuffs at 10 and 15cts. Anderson & Co.

FAIL TO DO THEIR DUTY.

Everybody has at times failed to do their duty toward themselves. Hundreds of lady readers suffer from sick headache, nervousness, sleeplessness and female troubles. Let them follow the example of Mrs. H. Herbechter, Stevens Point, Wis., who for five years suffered greatly from Nervous Prostration and sleeplessness, tried physicians and different medicines without success. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine caused sound sleep every night and she is feeling like a new person. Meyer, Waverly, N. Y.

Crusty Old Gentleman: Your singing, Miss Taylor, is like attar of roses. Miss Taylor (with a gratified smile): Oh, you are too flattering. Old Gentleman (continuing)—a little of it goes a very long way.

To cure nervousness your nerves must be fed by pure blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure blood. Take it now.

Wibble: I don't see how a deaf and dumb man ever succeeds in getting married. Wabble: It looks to me as if all his love-making would be something in the nature of deaf amatory remarks.

NATURE'S DELIRIUM.

TITANIC FORCE OF SEA STORMS AND COAST TORNADOES.

Scenes of Terror Where Land and Ocean Meet—Portentous Results of Three Great Gales—From a Ripple Swell to a Rolling Mountain.

[Special Correspondence.]

CINCINNATI, Nov. 7.—The crew of a stout ship, with plenty of sea room, do not mind a squall much more than soldiers do a forced march, and a rocky headland can weaken a gale as Gibraltar defies a storm of shot and shell; but a hurricane, hurling the waves of the sea upon a lowland coast, is as terrible to the shore dwellers as to the sailor caught in the whirl of the breakers.

Hence the portentous results of the three gales that visited our southeastern seaboard within the short space of a few weeks. All three broke upon alluvial coasts and islands barely rising above the level of the sea, and by a strange fatality the main force of each storm exhausted its wrath in shore waters crowded with the shipping of populous seaport towns.

On the coast of South Carolina the ravages of the storm involved a greater loss of life than the sieges of Fort Sumter and Charleston taken together. The havoc in the seaports of eastern Florida resembles that of an earthquake. Miss Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross society, estimates that 20,000 persons will need relief for the next eight months.

But the coast of the Palmetto State is at least partially protected by sandhills, as that of southeastern Florida is by coral reefs, and the aggregate damage of the two gales was far eclipsed by the hurricane that burst upon the delta of the Mississippi on the night of the 1st of October. The islands of that estuary owe their origin to the flood deposits of the great river. A snag or the wreck of a ship gets fastened in a shallow, and becomes the nucleus of masses of driftwood, consolidated and, as it were, anchored by the roots of trees that have contrived to sprout in the mudbanks. Additional alluvium is gathered from the spoil of every freshet, and the new island manages to stick together, but cannot break the force of a seastorm any more than the low dunes at the mouth of the Zuyder Zee.

The coast of the mainland, so called, is for 100 miles east and west a mere chain of such islands, gradually turned into peninsulas, and no one who has visited that region in the course of the last six weeks is apt to forget the scene of general devastation. Up to the densely wooded shores of Allemand lake, some 40 miles inland from the sea front of the delta, the storm fiend had things nearly all his own way, and it is doubtful if the appearance of a Chinese seaport after a first class typhoon could give one a more impressive idea of the destructive and irresistible force of a coast storm.

During the night of Sunday, Oct. 1, when the moaning of the gale suddenly rose to a roar, the crew of a fishing smack, moored near Grande island, looked to seaward, and by the light of electric flashes on the northern horizon caught sight of a monster wave, a long ridge of sea water approaching on the wings of the hurricane, and they had just barely time to steer their vessel beyond the labyrinth of the sandbanks before the boom of the breaking storm wave was echoed by the crash of falling houses and the shrieks of the doomed islanders.

Grande island and Pilot Town, 30 miles further east, were struck almost at the same instant, as a puff of wind may be seen raising a ripple from shore to shore of a fish pond, only that in a sea storm the effect of the atmospheric pressure is felt all across a broad bay, and the swell of the ripple becomes a rolling mountain. After tearing the trees and buildings of the windward islands—and almost the islands themselves—out of their foundations, the storm sea burst upon the archipelago at the mouth of Rigolet bayou, where the heavier trophies of the first conquest now operated like battering rams, snags crashing through the walls of stone house and rafts breaking down the piles of wharfs and railway bridges.

It would have taken Sherman's army a week to demolish an 80 mile stretch of railway tracks as effectually as the coast storm accomplished that job between New Orleans and Biloxi.

Nearer the coast buildings of considerable size have vanished without a trace—too often together with their inhabitants, for at least two-fifths of the 2,000 victims of that climax storm perished in their dwellings. In the midst of the uproar of the elements the shrieks of drowning sailors could be heard from the bay, but with the best will the chances of rescue seemed almost hopeless. More than one lifeboat was capsized by being flung completely out of the water and turned over in midair or being hurled against piers with a force that would have cracked the ribs of an ironclad.

As seen from the distance by the refugees of a few stormproof buildings, like the lighthouse in the bay of St. Louis, the waves that accomplished that ruin often seemed to roll in leisurely grandeur, with no indication of their latent capacity for mischief, till they struck a solid obstacle—just as half spent cannon balls may be seen tumbling over the ground in a way that might tempt a novice to risk a kick at the rolling object, which perhaps in the next moment will demonstrate the risk of such experiments by shivering an oak tree.

The storm itself never left a doubt of its potency. Its blows in the open air felt like strokes with the broadside of a heavy oar, and massive buildings could be seen rocking to and fro in the blasts of a gale which undoubtedly attained a maximum velocity of more than 100 miles an hour. Captain Emile Larue of Quater Pass states that the fury of the storm again and again broke his grasp upon heavy bunches of shore weeds, though he is an expert sailor, with wrist power enough to climb a rope by the hand over hand process.

A stone building near Mississippi City, east of Bay St. Louis, was supposed to be hurricane proof and became crowded with refugees, but was at last blown away piecemeal, tier after tier of stones being torn off the roofless walls with a violence that scattered them in all directions and obliged the fugitives to run the gauntlet of a regular bombardment. DESTITUTION.

A Sad Condition of Affairs in the Upper Peninsula.

A SCENE OF DESOLATION.

KALAMAZOO, Nov. 4.—Mr. M. H. Moriarity, a prominent lawyer of Iron county, says of the condition of affairs in the iron ranges:

"Perhaps in no section is the present depression so severely felt as upon the so-called Iron Range. The year 1893 dawned upon a prosperous people; every mine was in operation; employment was to be had for the asking, and all labor was well repaid. It will close upon a scene of desolation, almost of despair.

"To-day every mine in the county is closed with no prospect of immediate resumption. Employment is not to be had. Thousands of willing hands are idle and much want and suffering exist in consequence. This suffering must increase with the coming winter and we are powerless to relieve it. Over in the adjoining county of Gogebic soup houses were for a time maintained at Ironwood, but these are now closed, and, owing to this unexpected call upon it, the county treasury is now empty and no further aid from this source need be expected. Unless relief is found by the resumption of work in the mines at an early day other counties will soon be compelled to follow Gogebic's example. Any way, much suffering among deserving poor must inevitably result. Living, as you do, in a farming community, you can little realize what the suspension of mining means to our people, who are dependent upon that industry and that alone."

The first entertainment in the course occurs this week Thursday evening, given by the Schuman Quartette and Miss Helen Bailey Babcock.

Mertillo Stitt, who had his foot crushed by a load of stone a couple of weeks ago, is able to be out on crutches, but it will be some time before he will be able to use his foot.

Mrs. Eleanor Glimpse died last Saturday morning at her home two and a half miles north of here. Mrs. Glimpse had been failing in health for some time, but had been confined to her bed, only about two weeks. She was seventy years of age. The funeral was held at her home, Monday at 2 p. m. Rev. Ramsdell officiating.

Mrs. David Monroe had a narrow escape from a serious accident last Saturday. She was filling her lamps from a can as she supposed, of kerosene, but, which by mistake had been filled with gasoline. When the fluid caught fire from a lighted lamp, burning her hand quite badly and setting fire to her little daughter's clothing. By quick work she managed to get the can out of doors and put the fire out. Thus preventing any further damage. The mistake might have caused the loss of life and property, and dealers cannot be too careful in handling the stuff.

A Jubilee Magazine.

A famous man is always interesting when he tells how he did the thing which brough him his reputation, and there is a particular charm about Frank R. Stockton's narrative, which opens the November Ladies' Home Journal, of how he conceived and wrote his famous story, "The Lady or the Tiger?", what came of its writing, and the condition of his own mind at the present time of the correct solution of the story. The inner personality of Mr. Howells has, perhaps, never been brought so close to its public as in the many-sided sketch of the novelist which Professor H. H. Boyesen writes of him in this number of the magazine, under the title of "Mr. Howells at Close Range." Few clergymen in New York know society and its leaders better than does the Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., of Trinity Church, and his portrayal of "The Society Women of To-Day" is as strong as it is authoritative. Amelia E. Barr, also, has a strong article in answering the question "Why Do Not Literary Women Marry?" which Octave Thanet cleverly supplements in a article, "But They Do Marry." Robert J. Burdette is at his best in pointing out what, in his opinion, is "The Taskmistress of Woman," while Will Carleton suggests his best poems in "Captain Young's Thanksgiving," which is accompanied by a characteristic illustration by Alice Barer Stephens. Eugene Field is exquisitely dainty in a new poem, "Shuffle-Shoon and Amber-Locks," while Nathaniel Hawthorne's daughter, Mrs. Lathrop, displays her hereditary gifts in a story, "How Love Can Hide." Palmer Cox has his funny "Brownies" in the polar regions, while the various editors seem at their brightest in this number in discussing every phase of a woman's practical life. With this number the Journal is ten years old, and the issue is made, in a sense, a jubilee. An interesting illustrated sketch of the history of the magazine is happily given, the number being clothed in a decorative panel cover by A. B. Wenzell, an excellent piece of work which that artist has not exceeded for artistic beauty in any of his previous drawings. To be only ten years old and have a circulation of 700 000 copies each month—the largest circulation now in the world—is, in a few words, the wonderful record of the Ladies' Home Journal. But it is deserved. The Journal is published by The Curtis Publishing Company, at Philadelphia, for ten cents per issue or one dollar per year.

Burglar (rousing sleeping head of the family:) Don't move or I will shoot? Where's your money hid? Head of the family (struck by a bright thought): It's in the pocket of my wife's dress. Burglar: That's all right. I'll just take the dress. Thanks.

A STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

MOUNT PLEASANT, MICH.,

THE OWEN ELECTRIC BELT AND APPLIANCE CO.:

Dear Sirs:—I now am able to say, after having purchased one of your No. 4 Electric Belts with Spinal Appliance about one year ago, that I thank God I have found relief from my terrible suffering through the wonderful healing influence of your wonderful Body Belt. August 29, 1891, at which time I was a great sufferer, and had been for more than four years, from extreme nervous prostration, so much so that, on the least excitement, my whole nervous system would be all of a tremble from head to foot, and unable to control myself in the least, and would affect me to tears like a little child. I am a farmer by profession; in the fields, or at work on the farm, or at any excitement, it had the same effect. I could not lift the weight of five pounds. It so continued with increased suffering, until I was unable to help myself, and for eight long months my suffering was intense. My stomach was so weak that I could not take any food but crackers and warm water for the above time. My kidneys were so weak that I could not retain my urine, it would pass from me continually, and I was under the necessity of leaving my couch from six to eight times of a night to void my urine, which was very painful. I was also troubled with severe constipation and piles, so that I was obliged to use injections to produce evacuations of the bowels, it was very distressing, so much so that I had to be lifted in and out of my bed for several months. The doctors could do me no good whatever, and I had made up my mind that there was no help for me this side of the grave. My limbs would become numb and cold, seemingly as ice, and I would try with hot bricks, rubbing and all other methods to restore the circulation and natural feeling, but all to no effect, and then it would pass off. Then again another attack would occur which would leave me helpless, and so continued periodically, and I could get no relief. The doctors told me that I must not do any work, and that it would be three years at least before I would be able to work. I agreed with them, for I could not, nor did I ever expect to again. The whole world seemed to me a blank, and my vital forces all had left me, and my life was fast ebbing away from me through the loss of my life fluids, which doctors were unable even to check. I had given up all hope of ever getting help, and death in all its terrible forms stared me in the face, from which there seemed to be no avenue of escape from this living horror, of which no living person is able to know or feel, except his sufferings be as mine has been. In this state of suffering and agony I continued until about one year ago now I met a friend who, on seeing my helpless condition, advised me to try one of the Owen Electric Belts. For several weeks I doubted his statements about what he told me of the wonderful healing properties of it, but he was so earnest and persistent that I finally consented to send for one. He advised me to send for a No. 4 with spinal appliance, which I did, at a cost of $30.00, which is your price for No. 4 and spinal appliance. I will say here that it is the best $30.00 investment that I ever made in my life in the way of doctor's remedies or anything else, as I had spent dollars, up into the hundreds, but could get no relief whatever. As soon as I received the Belt and Appliance, I had it charged and adjusted and put it on, and in a short time after putting it on I began to feel wonderful soothing and gentle currents of its healing power passing all through me, clear to the end of my toes and fingers, a prickling sensation like thousands of needles. Many were the sleepless nights I had passed, unable to sleep but from one to two hours through the whole night for months. On the third night after wearing the Belt I slept until morning and awoke greatly refreshed. I was not disturbed, nor had I to void my urine once through the night, and I have not been bothered in that way since. All the drains upon the system have ceased, and constipation and piles all have left me as if by magic. My nerves have regained their former strength, my eyesight and mind have become clear, and I have gained in weight about 15 pounds, and I feel like a new man. My stomach has got back its power of digestion, and I can eat almost any kind of food that my appetite craves, without pain or distress. I am gaining daily and I feel better and weigh more than I have for the past ten years, and it seems I have a new lease of life. I cannot say enough in favor of your wonderful Electric Body Belt. It is far superior to all medicines compounded for the relief and cure of chronic and complicated diseases and broken down constitutions. I would not take $2,000 for my Belt if I could not get another like it. There is nothing like it for relief and cure where all other remedies fail. I can not praise your Belts enough, for what it has done for me words can not express. I will say here that I recommend the Owen Electric Belt to all suffering humanity who fail to find relief from other remedies. It is the messenger of quick relief and certain cure of all nervous debility and other nerve troubles. I know it will cure all diseases which you advertise it to cure.

This you may publish to let suffering humanity know there is relief and cure to be found in your wonderful Belt and Appliances.

Maud: And, pa, what did Professor Crotchet say of my piano playing? Pa: he was quite extravagant in his praise. He said you possessed an originality in execution that was truly remarkable. He said he had heard some of your pieces performed by the greatest masters, and not one of them played them as you did.

Mr. Ed. Osgood and family started for their new home in St. John, Mich., last week, where he will engage in the grain business with his uncle, J. S. Osgood. We regret to lose them from our midst but wish them success in their new field of labor, our loss is St. John's gain.

Mrs. Smith German was attacked with lung fever last Tuesday, but is somewhat better at this writing.

Dr. Willard Perkins had a narrow escape while driving in Adrian last week Monday. His horse took fright and managed to upset the genial M. D., but the Dr. being a temperance man, soon regained control of his horse, and suffered only severe bruises.

It is small wonder that so many otherwise excellent people stay outside the church's pale, when such a spectacle of bigotry can be seen as that of St. John's Lutheran church of Adrian, recently, on the occasion of the burial of Miss Horft, a Christian girl who had lost her life in trying to help others.

The elegant new paper that glistens on the walls, together with other improvements, suggests the possibility that Mr. Penticost is about—to—well it is all right if he is.—Adrian Press. Now just hear that! Has not a rich widower a right to "fix up" his place, without somebody giving him "jesse" that way; still we do remember to have heard old Mrs. Blank, tell young Mrs. Dash that—well—we won't say another word about it 'til after it is all over, so there!

Office of J. F. GREER, County Judge, Green Cove Springs, Clay Co., Florida, May 22d, 1891.

Gentleman:—Twenty-three years ago I was attacked with inflamatory rheumatism, I was attended by the most eminent physicians in the land. I visited the great Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and the noted Hot Springs of Arkansas, and many other watering places, and always consulting with the local physician for directions; finally came to Florida ten years ago.

About two years ago I had a severe attack of rheumatism, was confined to my room for twelve weeks and during the time I was induced to try P. P. P., (Prickly Ash, Poke Root and Potassium) knowing that each ingredient was good for impurities of the blood, after using two small bottles I was relieved; at four different times since I have had slight attacks and I have each time taken two small bottles of P. P. P., and been relieved, and I consider it the best medicine of its kind. Respectfully

J. F. GREER.

RHEUMATISM

Is emphatically a blood disorder caused by inability of the kidneys to throw off certain poisons which accumulate in the tissues about the joints and muscles.

P. P. P., very simple, quickly and surely cures this disease neutralizing impurities in the blood. Experience and science both endorse P. P. P., as the only infallible blood purifier known.

The Lady Maccabees cleared between $15.00 and $16.00 at their pie social, last Saturday evening.

Friday morning of last week, news was flashed over the C. T. line wires to the effect that Chas. Anthony was the father of a fine boy.

Last Thursday evening, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fowler, in Ridgeway township, occurred the marriage ceremony of their daughter, Eva to Merrit E. Granger. We, with their many friends, offer hearty congratulations.

Last Thursday evening after the result of the election in Ohio had been fully authenticated, there walked in upon us, an individual wearing a high silk hat who was introduced to us as Maj. McKinley; we congratulated him on his success and sweeping majority in the state, when we discovered that we were being hoaxed and set up the cigars immediately.

There is considerable talk here of people having seen a wild animal some where in the vicinity of Lenawee Junction and Palmyra. It is variously described from the size of a coon to an elephant, some saying that it was a lynx, others a lion, but everybody was so frightened that they could not even tell its color. Now this looks bad for Palmyra and vicinity and a new phase of the creature; we had always supposed it took the form of snakes, but the atmosphere is probably different in that locality.

On Wednesday of last week a number of our young people took a drive in the direction of Deerfield, to enjoy themselves in dancing. Everything went smooth until "after the ball," when one young man saw his best girl safely home, but tied his horse loose to the post, while he attended her to the house; the horse thinking that he had dance enough for one night and that the master was going to stay till broad day light, took it into his head to go home, which he proceeded at once to do; he had not traveled far howeuer before some foot passenger thought they would ride as long as there was no one visible; when the horse was found it was quietly stabled near Lenawee Junction. Moral: Young man always carry a chain and padlock when you leave the horse standing till you assist her to the door. If you don't chain the horse, at least chain yourself.

Henry George in Adrian.

The reading and thinking public, and particularly those who have any interest in the single-tax propaganda, will receive with pleasure the announcement that Henry George will stop at Adrian on his western tour and deliver a single-tax lecture—a topic which has made his name familiar throughout the civilized world and given him rank as the most eminent political economist of the century.

Mr. George's coming at this time is to redeem a promise made two years ago, which was interfered with by his protracted illness.

Intelligent people admire genius and great talents, and the citizens of Adrian are sure to show their appreciation of these qualities in Henry George by extending him a warm welcome, no matter how much they may feel they are oppesed to his teachings. His listeners should include every person in the community who is interested in the welfare of human kind, for to this has the life work of this great American been consecrated.

We venture the predication, with a pardonable feeling of self-satisfaction, that after this event there will be many good people in Adrian who will be ready to excuse themselves for having so readily prejudged a cause which, on investigation, proves to be the solid rock upon which a reconstructed social system must be founded. There will be a better opinion of the great reformer, a better understanding of the doctrine he preaches, and more single taxers.

Dec. 6 is the date of the lecture. Admission, 50 and 25 cents.—Advance.

Now Stop Croaking.

The election is over. The tariff scare has been worked for all it was worth, and perhaps for a little more. The calamity-howlers have won and are entitled to their jubilation. Now let us all stop croaking and get together.

The country is safe. The government at Washington still lives, and is attending to business as usual. The tariff is going to be reformed, without regard to the croakers. Times are going to be better. Why not unite to help the improvement on?

Suppose the Democrats are responsible for the hard times? They have been chastised sharply and nothing more can be done to them at present. But the hard times are not cured by election figures. And they will not be cured by croaking.

In the natural order of things business is going to improve. It will improve all the more rapidly if we can only have an end of wrangling and complaining and of fruitless political agitation. If the result of the election shall only help the calamity-howlers to view the situation in a more hopeful light it will make everybody happier.

The croakers have been the greatest obstacle in the way of business revival. They have had their day. They have accomplished all they can. It is time now to send them to the rear. The world will move on in spite of them. Now is the time for Philadelphia to wake up and go ahead.

WONDERFUL SKILL AND TALENT OF CONGRESSIONAL REPORTERS.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A profession by itself is that of parliamentary reporting. The official reporter must be a first class stenographer. The 10 men who take down verbatim reports of the senate and house debates are 10 of the best stenographers in the world. It costs the government $50,000 a year for the salaries of these reporters alone. In the house five men are employed, each at the salary of $5,000 a year. They are officers of the house and are not subject to removal by change of party majority. This is a very good income even for a skilled stenographer, but out of his salary each man is compelled to pay the wages of the assistants whom he employs to write out his reports. It would be impossible for one of the stenographers to do both his reporting and his transcribing, for it is necessary that the work of writing out shall be kept up within a few minutes of the reporting on the floor. Within an hour of the adjournment of the house or senate the reports are complete in the hands of the compositors at the government printing office.

Some Fast Talkers.

In the house the stenographer takes a "turn" of about one column of The Congressional Record, which consists of 1,200 words. If the debate is lively, the reporter may get his 1,200 words in from five to seven minutes, but if there is a call of the yeas and nays or dilatory proceedings he may be an hour on duty. He knows by his notebook when he has finished his quota, and the man who relieves him is ready for the word to take up the debate where he drops it.

There are many speakers in the house who talk at the rate of 200 words a minute or more, Mr. Johnson of Indiana being the fastest talker, Mr. Boatner of Louisiana and Mr. Catchings of Mississippi being very close behind him. Ex-Speaker Reed usually talks at the rate of about 150 words a minute. He would talk much faster but for the time which is lost in his peculiar inflection of the final syllables of words. It is not always the speaker who appears to be talking rapidly that causes the stenographer the most trouble. The man who makes his speeches with oratorical effect is easy to handle, while the unpretentious speaker who talks in an easy, conventional style makes the pencil of the official reporter fly at a rapid rate.

The Thick of the Fight.

Years ago the official stenographers of the house remained stationed at their desk in front of the speaker, as the reporters of the senate do today. But now the table assigned to the reporters is used merely as a meeting point. Whenever a member takes the floor, the reporter runs down to a desk near him and thus literally works in the thick of the fight. While he is bending over his notebook the words of eloquence or bitterness are hurled to and fro above him, and the gestures of the excited orator appear to be in dangerous proximity to his head. One sometimes wonders how the official reporters are able to hear the interruptions which are made from all parts of the large hall. The theory on which the stenographers work is that as they are near the member who has the right to the floor, and he is able to hear interruptions and to answer them, they will be able to hear also.

As a matter of fact, many interjected remarks do not appear in The Congressional Record, and one of the most delicate parts of the duties of an official stenographer is to discriminate as to what should be taken down and what ignored. Now and then a reporter gets into trouble by putting into The Record an interjected remark, which, the member making it claims, was a purely private observation. Strictly speaking, only the remarks of members who secure the recognition of the chair should be taken down, but the reporters can never tell when a member will be called to order for something that he may have said without gaining the recognition of the chair, and they naturally desire to be ready to produce the objectionable words when called upon to do so. Hence, as a rule, they take everything as it comes.

Catching New Members.

When a new congress meets and many new faces are seen on the floor, the official stenographers sometimes have difficulty in identifying the men who make interjections. In such cases they often indicate in their notes "the man with the red beard," or "the baldheaded man in the second row," or "the slim man from Nebraska." Afterward they ascertain the name and state of the member and write them in their copy. In the senate the official reporters do not find it necessary to leave their table, for the dignity and decorum of that body are still well enough preserved to enable them to hear all that is said from that point.

The senate reporters work on a different basis from those of the house. In the senate one man, the veteran Mr. Murphy, holds the contract for making the official reports, getting therefor the lump sum of $25,000 a year, out of which he pays his assistants. Mr. Murphy has for many years made a large income out of this contract, but at a frightful expense of nervous force and health on his part. There has long been a dispute as to which legislative body gives the official reporters the most trouble. The reporters in the senate think their task the harder, while the house reporters have exactly the same view of their lot.

The facts appear to be with the house men. It is true the roll calls and other interruptions in the senate do not take as much time as in the house and there is, therefore, more debate, but in the senate many speeches of from two to six hours in length are read from manuscript, while such time killing efforts are almost unknown in the house. Of course when a senator or member speaks from manuscript the official reporters have nothing to do but take down the interjections, using the speaker's manuscript for the speech itself. In this way the reporters of the senate found they had very little to do during many days of the recent silver debate, and though The Record made a bulky showing it contained very little of their work.

Difficult Work.

When the silver question was up in the house and there were sessions at night as well as by day, each of the stenographers took down 13 or 14 columns of The Record, or about 15,000 words. This was a pretty big day's work, and while taking the notes was not so difficult he would have found it impossible to transcribe them with his own hand. As soon as the reporter finishes his turn on the floor he goes to his room in the basement and dictates his notes to a typewriter operator or to a phonograph, from which it is afterward taken upon the typewriter by young women operatives. Not all of the reporters use the phonograph, some preferring to dictate in the old way, and one or two of the old fogies of the senate corps still write their matter out with a pen, as they were taught to do in the days when typewriters and phonographs were unknown.

One of the botherations of official reporting is the desire of members to revise their remarks. The reporters take down the speeches exactly as they are delivered, and a large proportion of the statesmen like to get hold of the copy and fix it up to suit themselves. Every one knows what offenses are committed in the name of revision. New speeches are written or old ones so transformed that no one who heard them delivered would be able to recognize them in print. The only restriction that is placed upon a member by rule is that in revision he must not interject personal matters. It often occurs when two senators or members have had a personal altercation on the floor that by mutual consent they arrange to have all reference to the quarrel cut out of The Record. In this way the hot dispute between Senators Carey and Wolcott a few days ago was kept out of the official reports.

A High Compliment.

Ex-Congressman Horr, in a recent public address, paid a high compliment to the official reporters of the house. "It is a wonderful acquirement, that power of taking down words as fast as they are uttered," he said. "Amid the jargons and wrangles of congress, when half a dozen statesmen were all on their feet at once, all yelling like so many lunatics, I have seen these wonderful men, with their pencils flying, do their work so well that they would never miss a single foolish utterance or skip a single disgraceful word. As typewriters are the bane of poor spellers, so these shorthand writers are the terror of public speakers. To have them come in and take down in cold blood just what a fellow does say—aye, there's the rub. It's enough to make one's blood curdle even to think of it. I know the usual way out of the trouble is to get relief by abusing the reporter. I make this confession, however, here tonight. Up to date it is their accuracy that has got me into difficulty. I have suffered vastly more from their printing exactly what I did say than I have by their putting down what it seemed to them I would better have said."

Webster's Reply to Hayne.

Official reporting of debates in the American congress began in 1848. Before that time semiofficial reports had been made by contract with newspapers, and stenographers were used, but not to make verbatim reports. They took down what they thought was important and let the remainder go. Among the first official reporters in the senate was Mr. Murphy, then a boy of 14, but a brilliant reporter, who had learned his profession from Oliver Dyer in Philadelphia. A third of a century Mr. Murphy has been taking senatorial speeches, and he is not an old man yet. In the house corps David Wolfe Brown is the senior, having been 25 years on the staff.

Two or three weeks ago when objection was made in the senate to the reading of speeches Senators Hoar and Vest had a discussion as to the famous speech of Webster in reply to Hayne. The point was as to whether that speech had been given to posterity as it was delivered, or whether it had largely been made up afterward. No such contention would have been possible if there had been official reporters in the old senate chamber. Mr. Brown, the brilliant veteran of the house corps, gives me the facts about this speech of Webster and shows that great oratorical effort to have been rescued from oblivion by a woman. The story as Mr. Brown gives it was told to him some years ago by James Watson Webb, the famous New York newspaper publisher, who was a correspondent in Washington in his earlier career. Webb got the story from Webster himself in these words:

An Interesting Postscript.

"I had no idea of the importance that would be attached to my speech in reply to Hayne," said Mr. Webster, "and as I had only meager notes of the speech, when my friends applied to me for a copy of it I was unable to gratify them. I remembered having seen Mr. Gales of the old National Intelligencer firm of Gales & Seaton) taking notes in the senate chamber, and I applied to him for assistance. Mr. Gales said he was sorry, but so much time had elapsed since he made his notes that he did not believe he could read them. And when he tried to do so, at my request, he found he could not. This was very annoying, as I was by this time very anxious to preserve the speech.

"Mr. Gales perceived my annoyance and said it had sometimes happened that when he could not read his own notes Mrs. Gales had been able to read them for him. So we went to Mrs. Gales. I gave her my brief notes or headings, from which I had made the speech in the senate, and Mr. Gales gave her the notes which he had made in shorthand. The result is my published speech in reply to Hayne, which I had not thought very highly of, but which I now regard as one of my best efforts. Its preservation is due solely to Mrs. Gales."

The Famous Molitor Murder Case May Be Reopened.

William Repke Says His Confession Implicating Others Convicted with Him of the Crime Was False—New Trials to Be Sought.

SAYS THEY WERE INNOCENT.

ALPENA, Nov. 11.—William Repke, who is serving a life sentence in state prison for complicity in the famous Molitor murder, has made a sworn statement to the effect that his confession, in which he implicated Grossman, Jacobs, Furham and Vogeler of complicity, was false; that his testimony at the trials was false, as was also that of several others; that after implicating the others he wished to withdraw the statement, but was not allowed to do so by the prosecuting officers, who promised him immunity from punishment if he would testify according to his confession, and threatened life imprisonment if he did not do so. The other four defendants, who are also in state prison on life sentences, will apply for new trials. Repke does not say who did commit the murder, but intimates that it was Reiger, Sorgenfrei and the others who made confessions similar to his own.

NOT A CASE IN COURT.

A Michigan Tribunal with But Little to Do.

MARQUETTE, Nov. 11.—Keweenaw county presents a unique spectacle among American communities. The county has been settled for nearly fifty years and has a population of nearly 3,000. To-day is the regular term of the circuit court, and Judge Hain took the bench at Eagle River, the county seat, but court and counsel did not find one case on the docket, either civil or criminal. The only business before the court will be the formal entry of a few delinquent tax decrees. This lack of business before the courts is not due to any laxity or neglect on the part of the public officers, but simply because there is neither crime nor strife in the community. The county has one good-sized copper mine, employing about 300 men, and several other old mines that are only worked in a small way. The remainder of the population is engaged in lumbering and farming. The people are thrifty and reasonably prosperous. The county occupies the extremity of the copper-mining Keweenaw peninsula, which projects into the waters of Lake Superior, and not a passenger train enters its borders. The spectacle of a community of 3,000 persons without one lawsuit or one crime calling for judgment by a court of record is certainly uncommon enough to deserve special mention.

FOUND GUILTY.

Wellington Scrimshaw Convicted of Manslaughter at Alpena.

ALPENA, Nov. 12.—Wellington Scrimshaw, who for several days past has been on trial charged with the murder of James Hailer, was on Saturday afternoon found guilty of manslaughter. The jury was out an hour. One day early in October Scrimshaw heard his housekeeper screaming, and running to the scene found Hailer threatening her. He ordered Hailer away. The order was not obeyed, and Scrimshaw got a gun and shot Hailer, killing him instantly. His defense was that he only intended to frighten Hailer, when the gun was accidentally discharged.

For Safety on Railroads.

LANSING, Nov. 13.—Railroad Commissioner Billings addressed a circular to the managers and superintendents of all railroads operating in Michigan on the subject of heating and lighting passenger coaches. He urges the equipment of coaches, baggage, express and mail cars with fire extinguishers adapted to hand use, and sounds a warning against the use of oil which will not stand a test of 300 degrees. All heaters must be of the safest known pattern and be kept in perfect condition and all fuel heaters abandoned forthwith.

The Inheritance Tax Law.

HASTINGS, Nov. 11.—A wealthy gentleman named Keeler, who lived in Middleville, recently died and left bequests to the amount of $5,000, on which Barry county wants a commission. Under the law heirs direct must pay 1 per cent. on personal property over and above $5,000. Collateral heirs must pay 5 per cent., both on personal property and realty, on all sums over $500.

Anarchists Talk Mildly.

DETROIT, Nov. 13.—About 200 anarchists met here Sunday to celebrate the anniversary of the hanging of Parsons, Spies, Engel and Fischer in Chicago. Several speeches were made, but all proceedings were of the quietest character. All the executed men were referred to as martyrs.

A Warehouse Burned.

ESCANABA, Nov. 9.—F. Braastad & Co.'s large warehouse was destroyed by fire Wednesday night. The building contained a large quantity of hay and grain, with a winter supply of perishable goods in the basement. All a total loss, exceeding in amount $20,000; insurance, $10,000.

Outbreak of Texas Fever.

MONROE, Nov. 11.—Some six weeks ago a train load of cattle was unloaded at Morrice for food and water, and five head of cattle belonging to two farmers across whose land they were driven to water have since died of Texas cattle fever. The state authorities have been notified.

Lock at Sault Ste. Marie Finished.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Nov. 11.—The last stone of the masonry of the new lock was laid Friday with all appropriate ceremony. The lock is one of the greatest pieces of masonry work in the country. The lock will be in readiness for business by the latter part of next summer.

The Educational Club.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

"I cannot tell in this letter all that Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for us, but can say this much: Our son Vinnie had a running sore on his face, beginning on one side and moving under his chin to the other side. We tried every thing to cure it, but no help came, and for four long years it continued, unsightly and very troublesome. Several persons urged us to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we found that he improved while taking the first bottle. We kept on

KEELERSVILLE, Mich., Feb. 1, 1893.

DR. A. OWEN:

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in stating that the Owen Electric Belt purchased from you last May has been worth more than all the medicines in the world to me. On the 27th of January, 1890, I was taken with La Grippe and from that to nervous prostration of the stomach and spine, liver complaint, exhition of the lungs and constipation. About this time I went to consult the best doctor in the county for treatment. I stopped at my mother's home on my return, as my prostration was so great that I could not reach my own home which I dearly loved. I was a young married wife of six months and had kept house only four months. My hopes seemed all blasted as I gradually failed under the care and treatment and nursing by my kind and willing husband and mother, one of the best of mothers. I could not get up or be moved, so my husband sold his farm and turned all of his attention to me. Time passed, and I suffered more than tongue can tell. I could eat nothing to speak of, and what I did eat hurt my stomach. At times I seemed better and then I would get worse. I remained in this condition about sixteen months, or up to the time I purchased your Belt. Then I commenced to improve at once, and [illegible] has been brighter ever since. My husband has purchased another farm and we commenced to live in our own house on Thanksgiving Day, and I have done our work with my husband's help ever since. Before I purchased one of your Belts I could hardly stand on my feet. May God bless you, as the Owen Electric Belt was the means of saving my life and giving me health and strength to live and enjoy life with my husband once more. I cannot say enough for your Belt if I should write half a day. My sudden improvement caused a good deal of excitement, as the doctors and every one around said I would die of consumption. I can eat my three meals every day. If you wish to publish this letter we will answer all correspondents who wish to inquire fully about my case, by sending directed and stamped envelope.

Yours very truly,
MR. EDWIN and HATTIE McGOWAN,
KEELERSVILLE, Mich.

READ THE NEXT LETTER SIX MONTHS LATER.

KEELERSVILLE, Mich., Aug. 2, 1893.

DR. A. OWEN:

Dear Sir—Six months has passed since I wrote my first testimonial letter in praise of your Electric Belt. I cannot say enough for your Belts. I have been improving rapidly since I wrote you the first letter six months ago. Now I am able to do my work, and this week I rode 22 miles on Thunder Knob on the banks of Lake Michigan, camped out over night, and came back the next day over hills and rough roads, 44 miles in all, though the hot sun. I could not have done the same one year ago for the wealth of Michigan. My health has improved so rapidly that others are waking up to the idea that the Owen Electric Belts are the only means by which they can be cured.

I remain as ever your friend, HATTIE H. McGOWAN.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy, I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years, I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles, was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kans.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. JOAQUIN MILLER WRITES OF A REMARKABLE EVANGELIST.

The Bishop of Africa and His Fifty-one Years' Work—A Napoleon of Missionaries—Sketch of a Remarkable Man—The Secret of His Wonderful Success.

(Special Correspondence.)

OAKLAND, Cal., Nov. 8.—Great as was Napoleon—great in all things except his inglorious wars—the venerable Methodist bishop of Africa is a greater man in all things. The work he has done during his 51 years of service as an evangelist is simply incredible. Sitting at his table yesterday, I said, "You have traveled much farther than any man perhaps, living or dead?"

BEGINNING WITH THE CHILDREN.

"I never thought of that before," he answered as if to himself, "but it may be true." Then in a quiet, serious way he told me of his many journeys around the world, one of which involved 13 years' absence from his family here in Alameda, Cal. He came to us here in 1849, preaching from one end of the state to the other, often in the streets, always among the poor or depraved, always alone and on foot, always poor and without pay, remaining only long enough in one place to found a mission or church and then passing on to a place among strangers. He was always known among us as "Father Taylor," and though he has long been Bishop Taylor, still we old boys of the old days speak of him reverently, and often with uncovered heads, as Father Taylor.

Here is a paragraph given me by one of his sons which may throw some light on the early life of this most beloved of all living men:

"William Taylor was born May 2, 1821, in Rockbridge county, Va. He was first a junior preacher to Franklin circuit in the Baltimore conference. He was reported to the preacher in charge as follows: 'He is tall and slender, active and strong, wears a blue coat, with brass buttons. His legs extend three or four inches lower than his pants, and he wears the broadest toed boots that have ever been seen in these parts. He has but little experience in preaching, but he is desperately in earnest and has the stuff in him to make a preacher, and he can sing just as loud as he likes. In October, 1849, he was sent with his family as a missionary to California, arriving in San Francisco, the city of tents, in September, 1849, after a five months' voyage 'round the Horn.'

"He has been 51 years in service. Says he 'was put up to keep in all climates'—counts on 15 years longer to labor in Africa. He was 73 years old last May 1. In Africa he walks everywhere, sleeping under the stars."

This remarkable man has been called the Napoleon of missions because of his great good sense, his discipline and capacity to bring order out of chaos and found mission churches, that pay their own way, even where the most patient and sincere Catholic priests have failed. For example he has a self sustaining seminary in one of the South American capitals—nearly 500 girls, all eager to learn, in his Methodist seminary! And all around the globe he has done and is still doing something of this sort. He has lifted up the name and vocation of the missionary from out of the rut and slough into which it was sinking and made it respected even in the heart of Africa. "Danger? There is no more danger in even the heart of Africa than here in Alameda. I never was armed in my life, nor had an escort of armed men. Stanley was wrong in this. Surely Stanley could have gone in peace and unharmed where Livingstone had gone before him."

And then the good bishop went on to tell me about his recent visits to a remote African city. He had two young men with him. The last day it rained incessantly, and they reached the city wet to the skin. They were sent at once to the house for strangers, an institution familiar to all these remote heathen centers. The queen, head wife of the king, received them at the door. She did not know them or their business; she only knew they were strangers and homeless and hungry. She built a great wood fire with her own hands, and while they dried their clothes and took heart at such kindly welcome she cooked a sumptuous dinner of chickens, cornbread, baked yams and fried bananas. This she spread on a mat before the fire and then sat back in silence while they ate, and it was only after they had eaten and rested their fill that a single question was asked.

"Well, well, bishop," said I in surprise, "what need can such people have for Christianity?"

Very steadily the venerable evangelist looked at me for a long time, and then he said solemnly, "They need the salvation of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is this earnestness of Bishop Taylor that has made him so beloved and such a power over the wide world. The portrait here shows his theory and his proclivity. He begins with the children—babes in arms. May he still have many years.

Some Details About Suicide.

From an analysis of 100 cases of suicide a contemporary concludes that, according to the evidence obtained, men destroy themselves with much greater readiness than women. The proportion is about two to one. Middle age is the period at which the tendency is most marked, and the middle class holds the same position in the social scale. Mental influence is more active than any physical inducement, and pecuniary and related social difficulties fill a larger space than any other group of motives.

CAST UP BY THE SEA.

THE STORY OF JOHN RIDLEY AND HIS DAUGHTER.

The Singular Phenomenon at the Mouth of Spanish Wells Harbor—Fate of a Mysterious Englishman—The Dreadful Storm of the Bahamas.

(Special Correspondence.)

SPANISH WELLS, Bahama Islands, Nov. 8.—The natives of this region still speak with awe of the "hurricane of '66." It was indeed a dreadful storm, and it spread death's mantle all over these beautiful isles. We who live in the busy world have well nigh forgotten the disaster. Its memory is crowded out of our calendar. But the people of Eleuthera and other Bahama islands lead almost eventless lives, and a casualty such as that hurricane is perfectly fresh to this day.

Passing up the coast of Eleuthera from Harbor island to Spanish Well, I saw the timbers of a vessel projecting above the sand of a little beach. When I arrived at Spanish Wells, Joe Pindar and I sailed day after day in his dingy, and I heard the story of Ridley's Head. I also learned the history of the wreck.

I doubt if in all the world there is a more singular phenomenon of nature than this presented in Ridley's Head. At the mouth of Spanish Wells harbor a series of high, jagged cliffs jut boldly out over the ocean. A native of the settlement will convey you in a boat to the harbor entrance, and when he reaches the right spot you will see Ridley's Head. A stranger would never find it himself, but with a Bahaman as a pilot you will behold the crags blend and blend until a gigantic profile is formed. The outline is that of the face of an old man. Every lineament is stern, from the firm chin to the high forehead. Bushes perfectly resemble hair. A fragment of rock has fallen into the water, and that is Ridley's Hat. The face must measure 30 feet in length. It is a wonderful sight.

The eastern coast of Eleuthera is very rough. Instead of the smiling landscape that greets us as we approach the majority of the Bahamas, here the waves beat against precipitous headlands or rocky shores. From Harbor island up around the northeast of Eleuthera to Spanish Wells the sea is especially dangerous for vessels. The inside passage is rarely attempted—never without an experienced pilot. Reefs show in every direction, and through them and skirting the inhospitable coast winds a narrow channel. Sometimes there is scarcely room for a schooner to slide along. The vicinity is dreaded by sailors and is hardly equaled in the world. God help the ship caught on a lee shore at this point. The sharp coral rocks would splinter her in an instant, and the bones of the crew would be broken in pieces.

The brig John Drew of Nova Scotia was overtaken half way between Harbor island and Spanish Wells by the hurricane of 1866. She was, of course, absolutely helpless and was driven, in the first fury of the storm, over the reefs upon the shore. When the gale had ceased, such was the force of wind and wave that only a few timbers stuck out of the sand to mark her grave. The elements had buried her deep. Her cargo of tobacco was never reached by the wreckers. The bodies of the crew were swallowed by the reefs. The captain's remains were washed upon the crags and there found. Two persons miraculously escaped. The bodies of a man and young girl were discovered in a shallow near the shore. They were not lifeless, and with no inconsiderable exertion the inhabitants who had collected there fanned the spark of vitality in each into a steady flame.

The stranger, when he had recovered consciousness, said his name was John Ridley. The girl was his daughter. When the vessel became unmanageable, the two bound life preservers about them and jumped into the ship's boat. The captain followed them. All the crew had taken the other boat and deserted. The frail craft containing these three was carried over the reefs, right up to the shore, and then capsized. The captain doubtless was hurled on a rock and stunned, but the man and girl managed to cling together. He grasped a crag and hung on until the spray choked him. Then, it seems, the billows flung him and his fainting daughter into an angle behind a reef. Here they were in a comparatively sheltered place. And so life was vouchsafed to John Ridley and his child. He never told his history.

Inquiry since has demonstrated that he was an Englishman of wealthy and noble connections. He was accused of a crime and fled from Liverpool to America. He took passage from Baltimore on the Drew, for his daughter's health, he said. He expressed no desire to return to America. An occasional fruiter is the only vessel that visits Spanish Wells. Ridley appeared to be satisfied with his lot and bought a house there, and with the assistance of his neighbors furnished it. He was uncommunicative, and although he appreciated the favors shown him he sought no company save that of his daughter. He idolized her. Bessie Ridley was a veritable angel of light to these simple, homely Bahamans. Her blue eyes, her wavy hair, her slender little figure, her sweetness of disposition, form an ideal worshiped to this day by these islanders.

Ridley purchased a dingy, and he and Bessie spent most of the daytime on the water. Two years passed. On a Sunday afternoon a squall rushed down from the east, and many a small boat was wrecked near Spanish Wells. After the storm was over the body of the Englishman was found, battered and disfigured, at the base of the great head. Life was extinct. The girl, Bessie Ridley, was never seen again, but her hat, daintily ornamented with colored grasses, was picked up way on top of the cliff.

And so Ridley's Head was christened. They say that on bad nights the spirit of the English maiden can be seen there flitting from crag to crag. But John Ridley rests quietly in the little graveyard at Spanish Wells.

Because the alleged steer which its partner inexperienced man of factories have gone down in ordinary winds, a feeling has grown that the Steel Wheel is unsafe. Judge it only by the Aermotor.

In this year's blizzards and cyclones the Aermotor loss is proportionately much less than any wooden wheel, while the loss of the imitation steel ones has frequently been total:

45 sold in '88
2,288 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,049 sold in '91
60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes. That's the figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country." Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower!

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the valueless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, still, Steel Fixed Tower—if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to chirn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO. 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27-29 Beale St., San Francisco.

L. M. WALDRON, Agent, Tecumseh.

GALVANIZED It is not enough to say a windmill is galvanized. That is even exposed edges and it is not so good as painting. The Steel Aermotor and Steel Tower are now galvanized after being completely fabricated, thus protected from decay.

The Aermotor Pneumatic Water Supply System enables you to supply every part of your house with water without an Elevated Tank.

FOOT BALL.

Try and Understand the Game of the Season.

The following extract taken from an article on foot ball by Walter Camp, in A. G. Spalding's Athletic Library will give an insight into the game as played this season:

The team of eleven men is usually divided into seven rushers or forwards, who stand in a line facing their seven opponents; a quarter-back, who stands just behind this line, two half-backs, a few yards behind the quarter-back; and finally, a full-back or goal-tend, who stands a dozen yards or so behind the half-backs. This gives the general formation but is, of course, dependent upon the plays to be executed.

The two sides then toss up, and the one winning the toss has choice of goal or kick-off. If there be a wind, he will naturally and wisely take the goal from which that wind is blowing and allow his opponents to have the ball. If there be no advantage in the goals he will choose the kick-off, and his opponents in that case take whichever goal they like. The two teams then line up; the holders of the ball placing it upon the exact centre of the field, and the opponents being obliged to stand back in their own territory at least ten yards, until the ball has been touched with the foot. There are now several methods of starting the play. Primarily, however, the ball must be hit by the foot of the man making the kick-off. He may kick the ball as far as he can down the field, or he may merely touch it with his foot and then pick it up and pass it, run with it, or even punt it himself. The method most commonly practiced now is, for him to touch it with his foot and then pass it to some runner on his own side behind him, while the other forwards mass in the form of a wedge in front of this runner, and the entire body of men, with the runner well protected in the midst, then plunges ahead as far as possible into the ranks of the opponents. This play is called the V or wedge, and is affected by almost every team, although the methods may differ slightly. As soon as the ball is touched by the foot, the opposing side may charge, and the rushers, therefore, spring at this wedge-shaped mass of players, and get at the runner as speedily as possible, bringing him to a standstill. As soon as the ball is fairly held, that is, both player and ball brought to a standstill, the runner must cry 'down' and some one upon his side, usually the man called the snap-back or center-rusher, must place the ball on the ground at that spot for a "scrimmage," as it is termed. The ball is then put in play again (while the men of each team keep on their own side of the ball, under penaly of a foul, for off-side play) by the snap-back's kicking the ball or snapping it back, either with his foot or more commonly with his hand, to a player of his own side just behind him, who is called the quarter-back. The ball is in play, and both sides may press forward as soon the ball is put in motion by the snap-back. Naturally, however, as the quarter-back usually passes its till farther behind him to a half-back, or back, to kick or run with, it is the opposing side which are most anxious to push farward, while the side having the ball endeavor by all lawful means to retard that advance until their runner or kicker has had time to execute his play. It is the antagonism of desire on the part of both sides that has given rise to the special legislation regarding the use of the hands, body and arms of the contestants—and beginners must carefully note the distinction. As soon as the snap-back has sent the ball behind him, he has really placed all the men in his own line off-side, that is, between the ball and the opponent's goal, and they, therefore, can theoretically only occupy the positions in which they stand, while the opponents have the legal right to run past them as quickly as possible. For this reason, and bearing in mind that the men "on-side" have the best claim to right of way, it has been enacted that the side having possession of the ball may not use their hands or arms, but only their bodies when thus off-side, to obstruct or interrupt their adversaries, while the side running through in the endeavor to stop the runner, or secure possession of the ball, may use their hands and arms to make passage for themselves.

The game thus progresses in a series of downs followed by runs or kicks, as the case may be, the only limitation being that of a rule designed to prevent one side continually keeping possession of the ball without material advance or retreat, which would be manifestly unfair to the opponents. This rule provides that in three "downs" or attempts to advance the ball, a side not having made five yards toward the opponent's goal or retreated twenty yards toward their own goal, must surrender possession. As a matter of fact, it is seldom that a team actually surrenders the ball in this way, because after two attempts, if the prospects of completing the five-yard gain appear small, it is so manifestly politic to kick the ball as far as possible down the field, that such a method is more likely to be adopted than to make a last attempt by a run and give the enemy possession almost on the spot. In such an exigency no feint at a kick is allowed by the rules but it must be such a kick as to give the opponents fair and equal chance to gain possession of the ball. There is one other element entering into this progress of the game, and that is the fair catch. This can be made from a kick by the opponents, provided the catcher takes the ball on the fly and, no other of his own side touching it, he plants his heel in the ground at the spot where the catch is made. This entitles him to a free-kick; that is, his opponents cannot come beyond his mark, made by heeling the catch, while he and his side may retire such distance toward his own goal as he sees fit, and then make a punt or drop, or place the ball for a place-kick. He ordinarily, however, in these days of wedge play, acts exactly as we have described for the first kick-off—that is, merely touches the ball with his foot in order to conform with the rule that he must put in play by a kick, and then passes it to another of his own side for a run. His own men must be behind the ball when he kicks it, under penalty of off-side.

Whenever the ball goes across the side boundary line of the field, it is said to go "into touch," and it must be at once brought back to the point where it crossed the line, and then put in play by some member of the side which carried it out, or first secured possession of it after it went out. The methods of putting it in play are as follows: to throw it directly in at right angles to the touch line, bound it or touch it in, and then pass it back, or finally, and most commonly, walk into the field and make an ordinary scrimmage of it the same as after a down. In this latter case, the player who intends walking in with it must, before stepping into the field, declare how many paces he will walk in, in order that the opponents may know where the ball will be put in play. We will suppose that the ball by a succession of these plays, runs, kicks, downs, fair catches, etc., has progressed toward one or the other of the goals, until it is within kicking distance of the goal-posts. The question now arises in the mind of the captain of the attacking side, as to whether his best plan of operations will be to try a drop-kick at the goal, or to continue the running attempts, in the hope of carrying the ball across the goal-line, for this latter play will count his side a touch-down, and entitles them to a try at-goal. The touch-down itself will count 4 points, even if he afterward fail to convert it into a goal, by sending the the ball over the bar and between the posts, while if he succeeds in converting it, the touch-down and goal together count 6 points. A drop-kick, if successful on the other hand, counts but 5 points, and is, of course, even if attempted, by no means sure of resulting successfully. If it fail, the ball is almost certain to cross the goal-line somewhere, and this gives the opponents the right to bring it out to the twenty-five yard line for kick-out, and then have a free-kick, which results in still further gain for them, and usually puts their goal out of danger for the time being. He must therefore carefully consider both issues at this point, and it is the handling of those problems that show his quality as as a captain. If he elects to continue his running attempts, and eventually carries the ball across the line, he secures a touch-down at the spot where the ball is finally held after being carried over, and any player of his side may then bring it out, making a mark with his heel on the line as he walks out and when he reaches a suitable distance, place the ball for one of his side to kick, the opponents meantime standing behind their goal-line. In placing the ball it is held in the hands of the placer, close to, but not touching the ground, and then carefully aimed until the direction is proper. Then, at a signal from the kicker that it is right it is placed on the ground, still steadied by the hand or finger of the placer, and instantly kicked by the place-kicker. The reason for this keeping it off the ground until the last instant, is that the opponents can charge as soon as the ball touches the ground, and hence would surely stop the kick if much time intervened. If the ball goes over the goal, it scores as above indicated, and the opponents then take it to the middle of the field for kick-off again, the same as the commencement of the match. The same result happens by this year's rules if the goal be missed, although formerly the opponents could then only bring it out to the twenty-five yard line.

There is one other issue to be considered at this point, and that is, if the ball be in possession of the defenders of the goal, or if it fall into their hands when thus close to their own goal. Of course, they will naturally endeavor by running or kicking, to, if possible, free themselves from the unpleasant situation that menances them. Sometimes, however, this becomes impossible, and there is a provision in the rules which gives them an opportunity of relief, at a sacrifice it is true, but scoring less against them if their opponents should re-gain possession of the ball and make a touch-down or a goal. A player may at any time kick, pass or carry the ball across his own goal-line, and there touch it down for safety. This, while it scores two points for his opponents, gives his side the privilege of bringing the ball out to the twenty-five yard line and then taking a kick-out, performed like a kick-off or any other free-kick, except that it must be a drop-kick or a place-kick.

This succession of plays for three-quarters of an hour in a regular match. Then intervenes a ten-minute intermission, after which the side which did not have the kick-off at the commencement of the match, has possession of the ball for the kick-off at the second three-quarters of an hour. The result of the match is determined by the number of points scored during the two three-quarters, a goal from a touch-down yielding 6 points, one from the field, that is, without the aid of a touch-down, 5 points; a touch-down from which no goal is kicked giving 4, and a safety counting 2 points for the opponents. In practice it is usual to have the two periods of play considerbly shorter than forty-five minutes, generally not over twenty or thirty.

Will you give me this little hand?" he pleaded, lovingly. "Reginald, this hand is already pledged," she replied. "I will redeem it," he answered absently. "If you will let me have the pawn ticket."

The C. J. & M. railroad has posted notices at station and about town, saying that passengers will not be carried upon their trains to or from Dundee and Toledo and intermediate stations. That is, people who live in this neck of woods are not to enjoy privileges of other sections. Well, if occasion makes it desirable to ride upon such trains we would advise such persons to board the trains, pay their fare and ride.—Dundee Reporter.

A few days since it was stated that convicts were contracted to work for about 60 cents per day at the state prison at Jackson, but information received later proves that we had the figures too high by one-third, as many are contracted now to work at the ridiculous price of 40 cents a day. If free labor should make competition too sharp at this, it is possible that the state would even make a reduction to meet the exegencies of the case. This state of affairs, if it continues to go on, will develop into an octopus which the laboring men of the Wolverine state will look at in wonder and astonishment.—Telegram.

Are You Ambitious?

Especially, are you an ambitious woman anxious to make a career for yourself? Then you will be more than interested in "The Road to Fame or Fortune," published, in Demorest's Family Magazine for December, which is a faithful chronicle of how ambitious girls desirous of becoming successful business women live and labor in New York, giving suggestions and valuable information that cannot fail to be of inestimable benefit to all talented and ambitious girls. And this is an ideal Christmas number, also. The lovely water color "Did Santa Claus Bring You?" will appeal to everyone, young or old. "Christmas Eve at Bethlehem," with its numerous illustrations, takes one back to the first Christmas Eve and tells how the traditions are preserved and what ceremonies are observed at the present day. There are two splendid Christmas stories splendidly illustrated; "An Excursion to the Land of Dolls," also illustrated, will interest all little maidens who love their dolls; there is a charming Christmas play, "The Prodigal," which will afford most timely entertainment; a very beautiful Christmas carol with original words and music, arranged so that it is appropriate for church, school, or the home circle; there are numberless suggestions for Christmas gifts; the many departments are full to overflowing with good things and everyone who loves babies will be charmed with the portraits of nearly a hundred who are competitors for the "Baby Prize," offered by this Magazine. Indeed, the December number is a generous twenty cents' worth; but it is only a fair sample of what is furnished twelve times a year for $2.00. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., N. Newport Items.

Recent investigations have developed the presence of a fine deposit of lime rock at Newport, Monroe Co., Mich., located between the Michigan Central and the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad, both roads passing over the property, thus giving unexcelled transportation facilities—as only from 300 to 1,000 feet of side track will be necessary. The celebrated Beal Drill Co. of Elyria, Ohio, shows stratums from eight inches to over two feet in thickness, of fine grain, and assays from Dr. S. P. Duffield's Dearborn Laboratory and other tests, demonstrates to be desirable commercial stone. We understood that Geo. M. Cartwright, of Wyandotte, Mich., its owner, designs to develope it.

The accident occurred a year ago this month, at the time a new bridge was being built and a temporary one had been placed at one side of the road; being strangers to this fact they didn't hit it and ker plunk—$1,300.

A work train which had escaped notice came around the curve and before the car could be got off with its load, wheels, handles, fence boards and dinner pails had started in all directions. A fence board went through the cab window hunting for the engineer and fireman and another scooped the number off the front of the locomotive, while the hand car is no longer useful. The concert at Niagara-on-the-Lake was a grand success, owing principally to the first professional appearance here of Mr. Harold Jarvis, the famous tenor. A fellow named Parker, from Mason, in the employ of Joe Sage, came into town Tuesday and indulged in the flowing bowl. He was of the opinion that he got what he needed all around.

We were handed the following yesterday: Several little boys have been seen smoking cigarettes, which they say the dealers sold them. If this is true it it would be well for any who have done this to remember the law upon the subject, as the matter will be investigated. We believe the law forbids selling tobacco to boys under seventeen, and surely there are a good many younger than that using it. Where do they get it? Do their fathers' purchase it for them?

The attraction at Sutton's Opera House, Saturday, Nov. 18, will be "Joshua Simpkins," a pleasing and interesting story of quaint New England life, written in the vein now so popular in both fiction and the drama. It contains an easily desernable plot, effective incidents, and characters entirely true to nature, and is said to hold the attention of the audience from the beginning to end of the play. It allows the introduction of much wholesome comedy, which fact is not lost sight of by the members of the company and of which they take every advantage, to keep their audience in almost continuous laughter. Among the members are some very clever singers and dancers who are given opportunity to introduce their specialties. The band and orchestra with this company are said to be very fine.

The most beautiful rendition of the day, though, was 'The Death of Nelson' by Mr. Harold Jarvis. The richness of his tenor voice, the feeling with which he sang, and the dashing military accompaniment of the full band of the grenadiers, combined to make an impression not soon erased from the mind of the vast audience of 10,000 who were assembled in the rink."—Toronto Globe July 17, '91.

The postal script will soon take the place of the postal note now in use. The postal note costs three cents and carries any amount up to five dollars, while a script sheet calling for amounts ranging from one cent to thirty dollars has been prepared from which, on payment of one cent, the amount of money to be sent by mail to any part of the United States may be torn off the same as an express order. Co. C held a business metting at the close of drill, Tuesday evening and after transacting the routine of business were surprised and startled by receiving the resignation of Capt. W. H. Hayden, who gave as his reason for leaving the service a press of business and lack of time. As soon as the boys could recover, a general uprising occurred and the resolution to table the resignation indefinitely was carried with a yell such as only soldier boys can give. Capt. Hayden, though a young man is one of the most popular and efficient officers in the service, and Co. C cannot afford to lose him.

A play of realistic rural character entitled "Joshua Simpkins" will be produced at Sutton's Opera House, Saturday, Nov. 18. The piece is said to have plenty of life and vigor in it and an ample supply of wholesome fun and laughter. The story told is of the rural variety and is said to be very similar to the "Old Homestead." When we say there is a real saw mill shown on the stage, with a real four foot circular saw, producing real saw dust, and that one of the characters is bound on a log and dragged to within an inch or two of it's glittering teeth, we have said enough to arouse the intense curiosity of intending visitors. A specially fine orchestra is carried by the company which give a variety of discriptive selections including all the latest musical numbers out. The band will parade the principal streets about noon.

A SIGHTLY SPOT.

Within the Range of Vision of Vast Human Interests.

[Special Correspondence.]

ORANGE, N. J., Nov. 13.—A most sightly spot is Eagle rock, which rears its stony front on the eastern edge of the Orange mountain just west of this city. It cannot be said of the view from its summit that it is possessed of features of rugged natural grandeur, but the expanse of land and water is very wide, and a more beautiful panorama has rarely been unrolled by Dame Nature for the inspection of mortals. In human interest it is doubtful if this view is equaled the world over. From Eagle rock one may overlook the homes and places of business of a larger number of his fellow men than from any other natural point of observation.

At the mountain's foot and climbing up its sides are the city of Orange, with a population of 20,000; the towns of Montclair, with 5,000; South Orange, with 3,000; Bloomfield, with 3,000. The city of Newark, population 200,000, lies to the east of these, and farther to the south Elizabeth, with 40,000 Bayonne, with 20,000, is found east of Elizabeth, and a part of Jersey City, population 180,000, is also visible. Just east of Newark are Harrison, population 10,000, and Kearney, 4,000. Hoboken, where dwell 50,000, is shut out from sight by the palisades, but may be included because the eye reaches beyond, and a dozen smaller New Jersey places, aggregating 8,000, are also in full view.

Beyond the Hudson lies the city of New York, with her 1,800,000 to 2,000,000 inhabitants, plainly visible on a clear day, and still beyond New York the heights of Brooklyn, the City of Churches, where live 900,000 more, are to be seen. The total so far is large enough, but this is not all, for on some of these fine autumn days the tall tower at Coney Island comes into view, so that it is only fair to include the 50,000 or more who live between Brooklyn and the island and 5,000 who dwell permanently on that bank of sand. The northern portion of Staten Island, bearing a population of at least 25,000, may also be seen when the haze is entirely cleared away, and this brings the grand total up to 3,523,000.

To add to the interest of the scene white sails and the smoky trails of steam craft are visible on the bays of Newark and New York, and the hurrying trains of a network of railroads that intersect the landscape like the threads of a design of a carpet pass constantly across the field. Where else have nature and humanity combined to make a picture of such varied life and motion and absorbing interest?

I do not know that any story of romance is told of Eagle rock, but only half a mile to the west, on the mountain's flat top, is the spot where, ten or a dozen years ago, was found one morning the corpse of Phœbe Paulin. The life blood had flowed from the poor girl's body through a small wound made by one knife thrust in the neck, so skilfully placed as to reach the carotid artery. She was not more than 18 years old, and she seems to have been a general favorite from the manner in which the neighbors still speak of her.

"The mountain was afire with excitement," said a farmer of the vicinity in describing the finding of the body and the search for the murderer, "and detectives from Newark and New York were on the case for months. But nothing came of the investigation, although there were two or three arrests."

The great world has long ago forgotten all about the Phœbe Paulin mystery, although at the time it excited almost, if not quite, as much interest as the Rahway mystery of later years. On the spot where Phœbe's body was found the Salvation Army built a speaker's stand and some rough board benches early last spring, and there they held meetings all the summer through.

A quarter of a mile farther west on the mountain top is a tiny lake, and from its shore one may look across the narrow valley still farther west to the second mountain, near the summit of which gleams a whitewashed stone that marks the place where Washington once camped during the war of independence.

Paper From Sunflowers.

[Special Correspondence.]

ABILENE, Kan., Nov. 14.—Kansas has found a way to utilize another of its riches. The great fields of sunflowers that through the summer are seas of gold, and give the commonwealth its familiar title, "The Sunflower State," are to be put to a practical rather than an æsthetic use. The gigantic weeds are the bane of the farmer, as they take possession of every uncultivated nook, and wave their yellow medallions from the tops of 8 and 10 foot stalks for six months of the year. Sometimes the chief expense in preparing the fields for spring grain is to rid them of the old sunflower stalks. It has often been said that if the weed could be used for any purpose whatever Kansas would be wealthy.

The prediction seems about to come true. The president of a paper mill at Salina had difficulty in getting straw with which to make paper. He looked upon the acres of sunflowers that grace the bottom lands of the Smoky Hill river and went to experimenting. With a flatiron and hammer he pounded up the stalks and decided that the pulp would do. He arranged for a trial of the weeds in lieu of straw at his mill, and the result surprised not only the spectators gathered at the trial, but himself as well. The fiber was better than that of straw paper. The toughness enables a larger amount of paper to be produced from a given amount of pulp. The gummy substance that destroys so much straw paper at the press rolls is absent, and the sheets run through the driers and finishing calenders without sticking or tearing. The entire stock of the sunflower is used, and the small cost of the raw material, being merely that of gathering, promises to make the new manufacture profitable. The mill is turning out the unique product steadily, and others will soon take it up.

Thus far only express and hardware papers are being manufactured regularly though sufficient paper of a better quality was made to print The Daily Republican of Salina on the day of the trial, Oct. 27.

Kansas seems to be only just learning the extent of its resources. It has a corner on sunflowers and can utilize them.

JUDGE LONG'S CASE.

Pension Commissioner Lochren Presents His Answer.

He Says the Judge Is Able to Work and Is Therefore Not Entitled to a Pension, and Asks the Dismissal of the Case.

SYNOPSIS OF HIS PLEA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11.—Commissioner of Pensions Lochren on Friday filed his answer in the mandamus proceedings instituted by Judge Charles D. Long, of Michigan. The latter was receiving a pension of $72 a month, which Commissioner Lochren suspended on the ground that Judge Long was not entitled to a total disability pension. The case was brought in the district court of the District of Columbia, the last proceeding being an order to Commissioner Lochren to show cause why he should not restore Judge Long to the pension rolls. Commissioner Lochren admits that Judge Long was legally placed on the pension rolls, but denies that the certificate increasing the pension to $72 was regular or lawful. In defending the right of the commissioner to suspend pensions he asserts that it has been the practice since 1819, when John C. Calhoun as secretary of war in charge of pensions exercised the right; also that Secretary Chandler suspended pensions in Pennsylvania and New Jersey in 1875 on account of irregularities of the claim agents, and that the same year a standing order was adopted regulating suspensions, reductions and dropping from the rolls and that such action is a departmental construction of legislation.

Having one's name on the pension roll, says the commisioner, does not constitute a property right, but comprises the privilege of receiving a bounty from the government so long as that person, in the judgment of the commissioner, belongs to the class of persons designated by congress as the proper recipients of United States bounty. The issuance of a pension certificate is not a conclusive adjudication, but subject to review and investigation. Such investigations must be executive and not judicial. The commissioner insists that his right to review his own or his predecessor's action has been conceded by Judge Long and had been invoked by him frequently with final success.

The commissioner says that the pension paid Judge Long is for total disability, and that Judge Long is not disabled, but is drawing a large salary from the state of Michigan as a member of the supreme court. The fact that Judge Long did not appear before a pension examining board, so that his case might be settled by the commissioner, is a reason why the mandamus should be denied. Further, this court has no jurisdiction to grant a mandamus, except to perform a statutory act. If the order of the commissioner is illegal, Judge Long's remedy is a suit for injunction. The commissioner asks that the proceedings be dismissed.

MICHIGAN CROPS.

A Synopsis of the Report for the Month of November.

LANSING, Nov. 11.—The Michigan crop report for November says that wheat sowing was greatly delayed by dry weather, and for this reason, coupled with the low price which the cereal commands, but 77 per cent. of the average acreage was sowed. The crop is doing well and but little damage has been done by insects. Corn is estimated to yield forty-seven bushels of ears an acre and clover-seed one and twenty-hundredths bushels. Potatoes will be 57 per cent. of an average crop. The condition of live stock is rather below that of last year, but the averages of all classes are above 90 per cent.

"Joshua Simpkins," a story of New England farm life, will be seen at Sutton's Opera House, Saturday, Nov 18. It is said to abound in novel features, wonderful mechanical effects, excellent singing and dancing and plenty of refined wholesome fun, and brings to light in the third act, a real saw mill in operation, which is claimed to be the greatest realistic stage effect ever produced. Between the acts a high class orchestra renders some excellent music, and also aid in the introduction of many pleasing singing and dancing specialties during the progress of the play.

An organization has been formed in the city for the purpose of helping women study civil government and all matters pertaining to legislative, executive and judicial powers, which promises to be most valuable from an instructive point of view. It is called "The Educational Club," and is most correctly named. Miss E. Cora DePuy is the founder of the movement and president of the club and all women in the city are invited to join the organization. Miss DePuy will edit a quarterly lesson leaflet for a six months' study in this work so that women may become familiarized with the workings of civil government in all its various branches including parliamentary rules, by the time they vote this spring. The work is wholly non-partisan, the aim being to fit women to vote intelligently and conscientiously. The club will pay for the leaflets for the use of the members and as many others as possible out of the general treasury. The leaflet for October will give the new election law, "topics for study for the month, the aim and object of the club, questions in civil government, and the first parliamentary rules." These clubs ought to be organized at once in every village and city in the state. All political parties will be directly benefited by the movement.

THE TOLEDO WEEKLY BLADE.

And a book containing all the Nasby Letters for One Dollar.

In answer to a general demand from all parts of the United States, the Toledo Blade has published in one volume, cloth bound, all of the "Nasby Letters" ever written by the late D. R. Locke, omitting perhaps a few unimportant letters on local or forgotten topics. Only a few of these letters were ever published in book form. Everybody has read some of them, but who has read all of them? The book contains over 500 large pages, and all the Nasby Letters written during a period of twenty-five years; also a portrait of D. R. Locke from his last photograph. It would sell at one dollar or more, but will never be placed on sale. One hundred thousand copies are now being printed and bound, and one copy will be sent postpaid by mail free to every person who remits one dollar for the Weekly Blade one year. Everybody invited to send for a specimen copy of the Weekly Blade, which will give a full description of the book "The Nasby Letters."

The Toledo Weekly Blade is the best and most popular weekly newspaper published in this country. It has the largest circulation of any weekly newspaper, and goes to every State, Territory and nearly every county in the Union. Only one dollar a year, including the above mentioned book free. Send postal to The Blade, Toledo, Ohio, for a free specimen copy of the paper. Send the address of your friends also.

THE FARM HOME READING CIRCLE.

Of the Michigan Agricultural College, for Promoting Agriculture and Kindred Pursuits.

In December, 1892, the factulty of the Michigan Agricultural College appointed a committee to prepare a course of reading especially adapted to the requirements of farmers, gardeners, fruit growers, stock breeders, etc. The course was outlined and circulars issued. So many expressions of appreciation have been received that the managers have been encouraged to carefully revise the course and take step to widen its scope and increase its influence. The State Board of Agriculture have made provision for the printing, correspondence, postage, etc., connected with the course so that the only expense to members is books.

The primary object of the F. H. R. C. is to promote agriculture and kindred pursuits. The circle offers a systematic course of reading. It furnishes books through the secretary at greatly reduced prices. It acts in a limited manner, as a bureau of information on agricultural subjects. All cannot enjoy a course at the Agricultural College, but no one is so situated that he cannot cultivate habits of observation and study. The aim has been to supply a course which shall furnish practical information and assist those who desire to secure some knowledge of science as applied to agriculture. It is believed there are many to embrace the opportunities offered by such a course.

The course is not limited as to age or occupation. All persons interested are invited to join. Old and young, fathers and mothers, boys and girls, send in your applications. Farmers' boys and girls are especially urged to undertake systematic reading. You are surrounded by a great laboratory. The fields, gardens, orchards and meadows are your class rooms. Interest your fathers and mothers. Ask questions. If you are unable to find an answer by consulting the index of your book, write to the secretary and he will refer it to the proper authority. No one is too old to join the circle. Let us all undertake the regular thoughtful reading of good books, in place of the aimless, careless reading of newspapers.

While it is recommended that grange-patron's lodges, alliances and other farmers' organizations form circles for reading and discussion, yet the great value of the course will manifest itself to those so situated that reading in circles would be impossible. As the name implies, it is a "Farm Home Reading Circle." Do not let the coming winter season pass without taking up the work in one or more of the classes

Five classes are offered: Soils and Crops, Live Stock, Garden and Orchard, Home Making, and Political Science. These classes were outlined by men prominent in their specfal lines, and, so far as it is possible, are arranged progressively. It is urged that the course be taken up, as recommended, and finished. However, if for any reason books further along in the course are desired, they may be ordered and credit will be given for their completion. No requirement is made as to the order in which classes shall be taken up.

BUSINESS AND LITERATURE.

Professional Writers Now Insist Upon Their Rights.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—William D. Howells, in a recent magazine article which has attracted much attention, calls to notice the relations of writers to the business world and indicates to them some of the ways in which they may be able to secure a better market for their work, although expressing the idea that real literary art, like any other art, ought not to be measured or inspired by any pecuniary rewards. The intimation in the article is that the writers of the present day have become so much of professional men that they have learned business methods and are carrying on their vocations with very much better results than was the case in the earlier days of American literature.

Yet the most famous of the earlier American authors were quite shrewd business men. Fenimore Cooper, who was wealthy when he first took up the pen of the novelist, was a very sharp business man, dealing with almost Shylock precision with his publishers, and going so far as to sue a number of newspapers for libel because they had criticised his novels and therefore impaired their market value, as he thought. Washington Irving, who came from a race of business men, was, notwithstanding his gentle habit, very keen in the driving of a bargain with his publishers, and he received such a handsome sum for his "Life of Washington" as enabled him to live in comfort in his old age.

James K. Paulding had the repute of being a sharp business man and of showing quite as much executive capacity in arranging for the publication of his stories as he did when he was a member of President Polk's cabinet. James Russell Lowell's business habits were not of the haphazard kind. George William Curtis, who earned nearly $100,000 upon the lecture platform, devoted every penny of it to the payment of debts for which he was not legally responsible, but which had been incurred in an attempt to establish a magazine with which he was associated.

Wendell Phillips was a most cautious and prudent man in his business relations, although he gave much of his money to charitable purposes. When they asked him the price of a lecture, he said: "If I lecture in behalf of the slave, nothing. If I lecture upon any other subject, $100 and expenses." Dr. Chapin, who in his day was one of the most popular of American platform lecturers, had one invariable reply to any request for his terms. It was F. A. M. E., meaning by that "$50 and my expenses," and after he received his fees he invested them with great prudence.

But these were the greater writers of an earlier day, some of whom learned to be businesslike after some unpleasant experiences. The class of professional writers who are nowadays earning comfortable incomes have already learned what Mr. Howells suggested in his essay, and that is that the newspaper and syndicate have especially taught writers first class business methods and shown them how to protect their own interests. Of the popular writers of today it is not easy to find one who is not esteemed by publishers an accurate and prompt business man, and many of them have shown great skill in making business investments.

Mark Twain's business habits are almost proverbial, and with the exception of one or two unfortunate investments, in which even abler business men than he were caught, he has shown unusual capacity not only for getting all that his works were worth, but also in the investment of the wealth thus received. Mrs. Burnett was trained by experience to excellent business habits so far as her relations with her publishers were concerned, but it is said by her friends that some of the investments made with the money which she received for the book and play of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" were not very successful.

General Lew Wallace, who has written a book which has probably had a larger sale than any other story written by an American, excepting "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is one of the most careful, shrewd and prompt of business men, and his manner in business circles is that of a person whose entire experience has been in business life. Mr. Howells himself is earning a repute for business shrewdness and insistence upon his rights which is almost equal to that which Mark Twain has obtained.

Rudyard Kipling is quite as forcible, energetic and nervous in his business relations as he is in his stories, and the publisher who gets his tales is very sure that he is paid the highest price that the market has offered for them. Donald G. Mitchell, who nowadays does not write much, was taught a business lesson years ago by a publisher to whom he offered the manuscript of his "Dream Life." The publisher told him that he would pay him a lump sum for the manuscript, but advised him to accept instead a royalty—advice which Mr. Mitchell accepted, and which made many thousands of dollars difference in his favor. He was supposed not to be a good business man because he invested a considerable sum of money in real estate in the suburbs of New Haven, but time has proved that he was right, although perhaps a little too early in the investment, for after a delay of some years the city of New Haven has grown up to his place, and the value of the real estate has very greatly increased.

Edmund Clarence Stedman is more of a business man than a litterateur, and in the hours between 10 and 3 may be seen in that excited throng of brokers and speculators who crowd the New York Stock Exchange. Hopkinson Smith is not only a charming story teller and an artist of some talent, but as a contractor he is regarded very highly by business men, many of whom do not know that he is also a litterateur.

The truth is that the majority of writers at the present time who are successful are careful business men, and the old stigma that a man who wrote was good for nothing else has no longer any truth in it.

E. J. EDWARDS.

A Curious Phenomenon.

A correspondent at Christiania gives an account of a very curious phenomenon witnessed from the top of Gausta mountain (height 6,000 Norwegian feet), in Telemarken, south of Norway. He says that early in the evening, after a heavy fog, a double rainbow, forming a complete circle, seemingly about 30 feet distant, was observed in the heavens. Continuing farther, he adds: "In the middle of this circle we all appeared as black, erect and nearly life size silhouettes. The outlines of the silhouettes were so sharp that we could easily recognize the figures of each other and every movement was reproduced."

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be promptly advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

Thousands of persons in this world that do not use glasses that should, then again there are thousands of persons using gasses they think suited to their eyes, but the truth of the matter is, the glasses do not correct the trouble, but aggravate it and produce headache, spots before the eyes, inflamation, granulation, winking, trembling spells, various nerve and brain affections, catracts, burning and smarting of the eyes, etc.; entailing not only positive injury to the sight, but untold misery and blindness. Dr. Galleher makes examinations that few in this country can make. He has instruments with which he can examine every muscle and fibre in the inside of the eye. He can tell you in an instant after examining your eyes whether he can benefit you or not, and will truthfully say so. It should be understood that Dr. Galleher is well known throughout the Eastern States as a practical and successful electrionist. F. M. Link hangs out a new and very tasty illuminated sign, calling the traveler's attention to a convenient table where at to refresh the inner man.

We fear the projected Thanksgiving hunt may be a failure unless the boys hand in their little 50 cents by next Wednesday night, so as to close the list.

Alphonzo Sutton's store in Ridgeway was burglarized Friday night. The thief was very conscientious in the matter, selecting those articles most necessary to keep out the cold.

All parties wanting any of those delightful "Delight Brand" of Baltimore Oysters, will leave orders at Link's restaurant not later than Saturday.

While out on a drive last Friday, our townsman, B. J. Wilcox, met with quite a serious accident. In passing a team his horses became frightened and run the right wheels into the ditch, breaking both whiffletrees. Mr. Wilcox in trying to escape received a severe cut over and below the eye, but still held fast to his team. An application of porter house prevented the eye becoming black and blue.

Midst his best Sunday go to meeting clothes, starched shirt, and an overgrown 160 lbs of human avordupois, and a profuse conglomeration of sour milk, dish water, and corn, and the frolicing, frisky legs of a not too genteel animal of the Bovine species, one of our exofficers of great oratorical capabilities, might have been observed hastily gathering together his disturbed humanity, on a bright Sunday morning, lest the observant eye of a passer by should discover his unbecoming predicament. This tragical and rather laughable episode occured whilst the owner (one F. E. M.) of this rather unruly cow was procuring the morning rations for his squealing swine, utterly unconcious of the threatening danger to his anatomy, for the salvation of which he was about to wend his way to the new church. We think there appeared opposite his name a goodly contribution.

Burglars broke into A. J. Sutton's store Saturday night, making an enterance through the cellarway. Both alarm draws were torn off and the goods scattered all over the counters and floor. It is hard to tell how much was taken, mostly in the dry goods line. They left their tools in their haste to leave. They also broke into Harry Smith's tin shop and took a box of files.

Grey Case was the victim of a surprise party last Saturday night. A large and merry company assembled and all voted it a splendid time.

What has become of the old fashioned gloomy, foggy, sour November? The oldest inhabitant can scarcely remember finer weather, or better roads, for this month, than we are now enjoying, but the weather prophet shakes his head, and says, mysteriously, "we shall pay dearly for this". Well we shall see.

Through some kind of jugglery the "Pentecost Pointers" appeared under the caption of "Onsted Odds," last week. Now the question arises, "who has the right to get mad about it?" but if the Onsted correspondent insists on having satisfaction, we shall send him to the printer's "devil," as the responsible party.

The social hop at Ben Snyder's last Friday evening passed off very pleasantly, with about 30 young people present.

Gordon Lewis is on the tramp among the farmers and people at large with a book, entitled, How to be Happy, by Grace Gold. This is a very interesting work and we predict for Mr. Lewis large sales for Christmas delivery.

Jas. Miller, of Adrian, called on us last Saturday. He has severed his connection with the street railway company and is at present holding the position of advertising agent for Grinnell Bros., of Detroit.

We understand that Jas. Sutherland will be in the field again this winter to solicit a share of your patronage in the repair of time. Take your watches and clocks to Jim and he will doctor them for you in any style, old or new school.

Co. C. vs. A. H. S. The Light Guard Eleven Caught a Tartar.

The Tecumseh foot ball eleven went to Adrian Friday afternoon for a match game with the Adrian High School.

In justice to our eleven it must be said that they labored under great disadvantages. Upon arriving at the grounds they beheld such a layout as had never been seen for a match game. The field lay north and south and was a verymuch inclined plane, the touch line on the west side was identified by a thick hedge of thorn bushes, and on the east by a row of apple-trees and carriages. Not a chalk line had been drawn, but the field was most beautifully marked off lengthwise by a series alternate dead furrows and back furrows. Dotting the field of play here and there were little hillocks, where apple trees once flourished. The Tecumseh boys took one look at the grounds and wondered "where are we at." We make one promise, that is, if Adrian plays here, they will play upon a little paradise in comparison, and yet we have nothing to brag of.

The game opened with Tecumseh in possession of the ball. Forming for the flying wedge they came down the field with good speed, so did the spectators. Center rush Heesen slipped and went down, and both teams piled up, with a gain for Tecumseh of eight yards. Lining up quickly the ball was worked towards Adrian's goal until it reached the 25 yard line, where they lost the ball. Adrian advanced by a center play with no gain; on the second down they made an end play; half back Slater made a run with the ball out through the crowd and over what Tecumseh had fondly imagined was the touch line; they were mistaken, however, as Slater finally emerged from the crowd and trotted behind the goal for a touch down. Murphy kicked goal. Again Tecumseh took the ball, lost it on a fumble, recovered it in like manner and by fine running on the part of Hicks and Anderson went well down into the opponents territory. Here the ball was lost on a fumble but was promptly downed. Right here occurred a feature of the game, which contributed greatly to his roughness. The Adrian man was fairly downed, the whistle had blown time and the ball was dead. The men arose, when suddenly the the downed man passed the ball up and it was carried the whole length of the field and given touchdown and goal. The referee failing to call them down for the steal the play passed. Twice this was tried but the second time failed to go. After that when a man was tackled he was stepped on, walked over and his head punched into the mud until he begged, in order to see if he considered himself fairly down. Such deals is where foot ball players are hurt. The second half was a continuation of the first. The umpire was unable to keep the crowd back and they were right in the midst of the players. The criss-cross and whirling wedge were successfully used by the Adrians. Tecumseh's interference was weak and at the end the score was 26 to 0. Our boys speak highly of Umpire Flindt. Adrian expects to play the return game Thanksgiving afternoon.

A CHILD ENJOYS

The pleasant flavor, gentle action and soothing effects of Syrup of Figs, when in need of a laxative, and if the father or mother be costive or bilious, the most gratifying results follow its use; so that it is the best family remedy known, and every family should have a bottle on hand.

Henry George in Adrian.

The reading and thinking public, and particularly those who have any interest in the single-tax propaganda, will receive with pleasure the announcement that Henry George will stop at Adrian on his western tour and deliver a single-tax lecture—a topic which has made his name familiar throughout the civilized world and given him rank as the most eminent political economist of the century.

Mr. George's coming at this time is to redeem a promise made two years ago, which was interfered with by his protracted illness.

Intelligent people admire genius and great talents, and the citizens of Adrian are sure to show their appreciation of these qualities in Henry George by extending him a warm welcome, no matter how much they may feel they are oppesed to his teachings. His listeners should include every person in the community who is interested in the welfare of human kind, for to this has the life work of this great American been consecrated.

We venture the predication, with a pardonable feeling of self-satisfaction, that after this event there will be many good people in Adrian who will be ready to excuse themselves for having so readily prejudged a cause which, on investigation, proves to be the solid rock upon which a reconstructed social system must be founded. There will be a better opinion of the great reformer, a better understanding of the doctrine he preaches, and more single taxers.

Dec. 6 is the date of the lecture. Admission, 50 and 25 cents.—Advance.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Alonzo Biddle died at his home in Raisin, Nov. 12th. 1893. The deceased was born in the town of Saline, Washtenaw county, Feb. 12th, 1848, consequently at his death he was 45 years, 8 months and 29 days old. He was of a family of eight children, all of whom lived to grow to maturity, his death being the second of the children. His father died several years ago.

On March 12th, 1865, was married to Sarah Beaty, who with an adopted, an aged mother nearly 80 years old, five brothers and sisters, beside a large circle of relatives are left to mourn his loss. About a year ago Mr. Biddle's health began to fail and slowly but surely the fatal disease, consumption, was getting a firmer hold on its victim. Everything was done that could be done for his comfort. His faithful wife was untiring in her efforts to minister to his wants; she did not leave a thiug undone that could be done for his comfort, fully realizing that the time would soon come when she would be called on to mourn his loss. Mr. Biddle spent his entire life in Washtenaw and Lenawee counties and had a large circle of relatives and acquaintances; he was a good citizen, a true friend and a kind husband; he was a man that was very much devoted to his family and relatives; in his dealings with his fellow man he was strictly honest. He died leaving not an enemy behind him, and all who knew him spoke in kindly terms of him, and when we were called upon to pay our last tribute of respect to him, we could say a good man has gone. THORNS IN THE FLESH

MISS MARIE TEMPEST SAYS COMIC OPERA STARS HAVE THEM.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The drama and comic opera are indissolubly united. The former plays an all important part in the latter. The divine comedy of song finds a fitting setting in its sister—the drama. The star, in either case, makes or mars the production. Of the two, the opera is the more difficult in its presentation, from the fact that the parties participating must possess both vocal and dramatic power. This combination, to any appreciable degree, is rarely met with in one person. Hence the scarcity of comic opera stars.

One might almost say that two courses of training are necessary to insure perfection. To be a successful comic opera singer one must diligently study both dramatic and vocal art. To become competent in both, their study must be taken up at a very early age, but without natural affinity for the work the most careful application is well nigh useless.

A good comic opera singer is born, not made. In fact the same rule may be applied to every art in life. To attain success, natural adaptability must predominate in the individual. Environment also has much to do in bringing to a successful issue innate talent of this order. The amount of labor involved in preparation for the comic opera stage precludes omitting for years of the closest study before even a slight success can be achieved.

The spirit of the times is inevitably turning people's minds toward whatever affords the most amusement. The day of Shakespearean plays and heavy tragedies of all kinds is passing away, and the public, the majority of whom are immersed in business from early morning till the shades of evening fall, naturally turn to some light form of entertainment, something which does not require deep thought or concentration in following out the details of the plot.

Comedy, in its way, is delightful, but with vocal and instrumental accessories it becomes "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." There is a witchery in comic opera which bare comedy could not possibly evoke. Music, always enchanting, is doubly so when the performer is a skilled opera singer. Then, too, the costumes are always selected with the idea of enhancing the beauty of the dazzling spectacle. It is to such scenes that the tired man of business turns when his day's labor is ended. He is carried entirely out of himself and away from all depressing thoughts. He hears nothing but the entrancing music; he sees naught but the gorgeous costumes which drape the figures of the lovely singers. Life for the time being takes on a rose tinted hue, and care is banished.

In tragedy all this is changed. The mind becomes concentrated, and the listener in his efforts to follow the saddening scenes presented strains every nerve, and what was intended as entertainment has at its conclusion quite an opposite effect. The decadence of tragedy may, in a great measure, be owing to the lack of tragedians. Melodrama, on the other hand, in its effects is rather pleasing, for the evening alternates between hopes and fears, and what ever impression is made is seldom lasting. Melodrama has always found favor with the American people from the fact that to a great extent it characterizes the plays of American authors.

To return to comic opera, its present grateful acceptance by the people may, to a great degree, account for their desire to escape for at least a time from the business troubles which almost overwhelm them. Thus it will be seen that this form of entertainment is an important factor in the people's welfare and happiness. Life is a kaleidoscope, and comic opera is one of its brightest prisms. To the expectant listener and sightseer its rainbow hues seem quickly to chase each other across his excited imagination. But the central figure, or star, while perhaps nightly delighting the eyes or gratifying the senses of an enraptured audience, has many outside trials to endure. Actions are often misconstrued and words misinterpreted. Her manager must be consulted on every occasion or ago unless he and the star agree it is useless putting forth any effort toward success. Understudies must be agreeable and efficient. In fact to produce an opera of any kind successfully, harmony must exist throughout. When disturbing elements creep in, the public soon learns of the fact—and it does not always stand ready to support the star.

Newspaper critics are also, there is in the flesh, and it would be well if all persons connected with public life could understand how much harm or good they are capable of doing. Reporters too play an important part in theatrical enterprises, and I would advocate their being treated with the greatest courtesy and consideration. For my own part, I consider it flattering indeed to be called upon for the little bits of information I am at times able to furnish.

In a chorus girl a pretty face and shapely form are both important adjuncts, and coupled with a musical and sympathetic voice are bound to insure success. But even with these advantages her life is not always a pleasant one, for many of these sensitive young women are often compelled to endure great hardships. And here let me say a word in their favor, for I have never known a kinder hearted class than these selfsame chorus girls. Many of them are the mainstay of invalid fathers, mothers or sisters, and they willingly yield up their earnings for the support of their loved ones. How true it is that all that glitters is not gold! Oftentimes the coryphee adds to her income by doing work outside of her profession. But during rehearsals and the first stages of the opera this extra labor is impossible, for the young woman's time is not her own to control. Rehearsals are frequently long and tiring, and it is useless for persons of delicate physique to take part in any performance requiring such preliminary work.

The construction of a comic opera is perhaps the most difficult thing that librettists and musicians can undertake. An absolute dauntless is indispensable, and this must be practiced in conjunction. The Gilbert and Sullivan operas, so noted the world over, are almost perfect in this respect, owing to the congeniality existing between the co-authors. They seem eminently fitted to work together, and consequently an exquisite harmony permeates their productions. For comic opera the airs must be light and "catchy"—something that will linger in the public ear, and that every little street gamin will be able to whistle in his inimitable way. These melodies penetrate the most fashionable homes, and they delight young and old alike.

There are but few successful composers of light opera in the world. It requires a unique gift of composition and a peculiar adaptability to the musical needs and tastes of the people. Many giants—intellectual and musical—start out with the best intentions, but at length fall by the wayside. To produce a meritorious comic opera requires indefatigable industry, tireless patience and a temper perfectly under control, for even after an opera is "staged" the composer sees parts of his cherished work literally torn to pieces by the critics. The man who can keep his temper under such trying conditions, and at the same time adapt himself to the changing whims of the people, becomes the hero of the hour.

A METEOR'S FLASH.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—In the spring of 1891 there appeared at the opening of the great Music hall in New York city, which Andrew Carnegie built and endowed, a composer of music who in his field bore the same rank as John Ruskin or Alexander Dumas or Ralph Waldo Emerson did in that of literature, and who, in fact, in his musical writings suggested some of the artistic traits which distinguished each of these great writers. His name was familiar to music lovers all over the world and he was an especial favorite in the United States, although but little was known of his personality.

He was Peter Tchaikowski, a Russian, with the blood of the Czechs coursing through his veins and making itself felt sometimes in his most vivid and impassioned music. An immense throng gathered in the Music hall, perhaps 5,000 persons in all. Secretary Blaine was there that he might witness the honors paid to his son-in-law, Walter Damrosch, who was to act as conductor of this musical ceremonial. In fact it was while attending this distinguished celebration that Mr. Blaine was smitten with that attack which was even then portentous of mortality.

Young Damrosch had invited Tchaikowski to come to America and assist at the opening of a new home for music, and the Russian, being delighted and having opportunity, promised to come to conduct some of his own orchestral compositions and to write one piece specially for the occasion. When it was announced that he was to come American music lovers felt as though a lion had been captured by Mr. Damrosch, and many of them who live in remote cities decided to be present that they might see Tchaikowski and hear some of his compositions as conducted by himself.

Tchaikowski was seen to be a man of medium height and not of great and imposing figure and of those bearlike proportions with which Americans are apt magically to picture the greatest of the czar's subjects. His cheeks were of as delicate a pink as those of a maiden. The yellow beard and hair slightly touched with gray and worn with careless care were all that suggested his nativity. He bowed modestly and it was then seen that he was without a trace of those manners of affectation, self consciousness or vanity which have characterized some great musicians, nor did he have any of that nervous fussiness, impressive enough in its way, which characterized the great German musician Von Bulow, who had been in America a few months before.

He took up his conductor's bat and as quietly as though at a rehearsal, held it suspended in the air for a moment, gave one little twirl, and a second later he and that spectacled orchestra were sailing away upon a glorious sea of harmony and melody. Before five minutes had passed it was made plain to the audience that there was one soul in that orchestra, and that was Tchaikowski's. Although his face was turned away from the audience, yet there was revealed that subtle, undefinable magnetism which makes the great artist the master of his instruments and his audience.

He carried the orchestra through a glorious tempest of music, sometimes rivaling the thunders of the heavens in its power, and then sinking so that it seemed to be the lullaby of a summer zephyr. And when it was through, he at first, not hearing the majestic applause of the audience, bowed, and with spoken word acknowledged to his orchestra their perfect service. Then he turned with a half surprised, half timid look to that great congregation, which was seeking to lavish a tribute of nourishment acclaim. They called him back and back again, so that he seemed overwhelmed, wondering why so much of honor should have been given to him then.

He had scored what the authors call a hit. His personal success had been even greater than that which the playing of any of his music before that day had caused, and in the week that he was in America he was over and over again amazed by the evidence of personal popularity which came to him. One of the music publishers said that within a week he had sold thousands of copies of Tchaikowski's works where he had sold three or four of Verdi's, and received most flattering and pecuniarily valuable propositions. Had he been at liberty he could have accepted engagements which would have netted him $100,000.

The waiter not late in his duties one morning shortly before he returned to Europe. He found the composer at his piano. Musical manuscript lay scattered all about. A Russian samovar sent forth the fragrance of newly brewed tea, and a tray containing the remnants of many cigarettes revealed the Russian custom which he had brought with him. He was as modest a man as had ever achieved fame, and he spoke with both the delight and the diffidence of a child of the joys of his experience in America. Then pointing to his manuscript he said, "I am just making notes of something which I hope to write purposely for America, and which will be first produced when I come here again, for I am coming in two or three years to stay a long time."

But he is not coming. On Nov. 5, meeting a party of friends at dinner, he drank some polluted water in St. Petersburg and died six hours later of cholera and the death of no other European composer, excepting Gounod, could have occasioned such widespread grief in America as did that of Tschaikowski.

GIVEN NEW JOBS.

Mineral Range Train Robbers to Work for the State.

As a Result of Their Pleas of Guilty the Hogan Brothers Are Sentenced to Five Years Each at Hard Labor.

THEY PLEAD GUILTY.

HOUGHTON, Nov. 18.—When the jury in the case of the Hogan brothers, charged with complicity in the Mineral Range train robbery, was secured Wednesday morning the Hogans' attorney announced that the brothers would change their plea from "not guilty" to "guilty." The judge did not pass immediate sentence as in Butler's case, saying he wanted a couple of days further to look into their case. Dominick Hogan's plea of guilty was a surprise, as it was thought that he was innocent. He was the express messenger. On Friday the judge sentenced both Edward and Dominick Hogan to five years' hard work at Marquette. When sentenced Dominick used much profane language. This disposed of all the cases of the train robbers, excepting that of King, who has been granted a continuance until next term.

FINDING OF THE JURY.

Conductor and Engineer to Blame for the Battle Creek Horror.

BATTLE CREEK, Nov. 16.—The coroner's jury, impaneled to inquire into the cause of the Grand Trunk wreck on October 26, rendered the following verdict:

"We find that the said collision was caused by gross disobedience of orders given by train dispatchers. We also find that Conductor Bertram N. Scott and Engineer Harry Woodley of train No. 6, east bound, are guilty of criminal negligence in running past the meeting point at which they had positive orders to stop."

The jury found that the Grand Trunk company had done all that could be done in the way of first-class equipments for the safety of its patrons, and the road was exonerated from all blame.

VICTIM OF A ROBBERY.

V. Rochons Called Away by a False Telegram and His Safe Robbed.

NORWAY, Nov. 16.—The little village of Waucedah, 6 miles from here, was the scene of an extensive robbery the other night. V. Now Stop Croaking.

The election is over. The tariff scare has been worked for all it was worth, and perhaps for a little more. The calamity-howlers have won and are entitled to their jubilation. Now let us all stop croaking and get together.

The country is safe. The government at Washington still lives, and is attending to business as usual. The tariff is going to be reformed, without regard to the croakers. Times are going to be better. Why not unite to help the improvement on?

Suppose the Democrats are responsible for the hard times? They have been chastised sharply and nothing more can be done to them at present. But the hard times are not cured by election figures. And they will not be cured by croaking.

In the natural order of things business is going to improve. It will improve all the more rapidly if we can only have an end of wrangling and complaining and of fruitless political agitation. If the result of the election shall only help the calamity-howlers to view the situation in a more hopeful light it will make everybody happier.

The croakers have been the greatest obstacle in the way of business revival. They have had their day. They have accomplished all they can. It is time now to send them to the rear. The world will move on in spite of them. Now is the time for Philadelphia to wake up and go ahead.

A GOLD MINER DISCOVERS SOMETHING MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD.

A REMEDY FOR RHEUMATISM AND KIDNEY TROUBLE WHICH WORKED WONDERS, AFTER EVERY OTHER REMEDY, INCLUDING A "SWEAT" TREATMENT WITH THE INDIANS FOR A YEAR, HAD FAILED TO RELIEVE.

A STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

CROOK CITY, S. D., Jan. 22, 1893.

The Owen Electric Belt and Appliance Co., Chicago, Ill.:

GENTLEMEN—I have been for some time considering the propriety of writing to you a few lines, relative to my experience with the Owen Electric Belt and Appliance obtained from you about eighteen (18) months ago. Justice to your company, and a desire on my part to make known to others who may be suffering from a similar affliction the relief I obtained from your institution, prompt me to send to you a voluntary statement of my case.

I am a gold miner by occupation, and have been for many years. I crossed the plains to California in 1852, and since then have been in most of the prominent mining camps in the then territories of Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, and at present in Dakota. Leading the rough and exposed life incidental to my occupation, caused me to fall a victim to rheumatism which finally utterly prostrated me in Helena, Mont., in "65." I was under the best medical treatment obtainable in Montana for one year, with but slight improvement, and was finally advised to live among the Indians, and subject myself to their "sweat" treatment. This I did and remained with them about a year, obtaining only temporary relief.

Since that time I have been a chronic sufferer—suffering pain and torture indescribable almost continually. It would be useless to attempt to describe my sufferings. It must be sufficient to state that I suffered from rheumatism in its worst form. I had spent large sums of money, changed climate, visited Hot Springs, lived alternately in high and low altitudes, and employed the best medical advice obtainable, hoping to alleviate, if not cure my complaint. It was all to no purpose, and I had about despaired of ever recovering fully my shattered health, when my attention was called to the Owen Electric Belt by a fellow miner, Mr. J. C. Johnson, of Creek City, who was also suffering from rheumatism, and who claimed to have derived great benefit from a belt obtained from you. I had tried so many remedies that I was fairly discouraged and skeptical about obtaining relief from any source, but finally determined it was my duty to give your appliance a trial. I will also state right here that, since coming to the town, I have also suffered greatly from kidney disease.

At last I sent for one of your belts, and applied it carefully, according to the printed directions accompanying the same, and can now truthfully say, as I now do to you, that I am no longer troubled with my kidneys, that I am entirely free from rheumatism, and I consider my health as perfect. All this I consider is owing to your valuable and priceless Owen Electric Belt, and I feel I am only performing a duty and paying a deserved tribute to Dr. Owen in sending this unsolicited statement of my case for his information.

Sincerely your friend,
JOHN MULVANY,
Crook City, Lawrence Co., S. D.
